INTRODUCTION.

The present volume is the third part in the same series as that published last year. Attention has already been called in the Part I to the chief Persian books of the sources of history of the Nawwābs of the Carnatic. Of these, Tūsak-i-Wālājāhī of Burhān ibn Ḥasan, has been done into English and issued in two parts.¹ The present volume comprises a major portion of the English translation of Sawānīḥāt-i-Mumtāz.² This Persian manuscript gives us a detailed history of the reign of Ghulām Ḥusayn 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II (1795-1801 A.D.) with an account of the last years of the reign of his father, Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I, together with a summary of the events in the reigns of 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur's successors, 'Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh III, A'zam Jāh Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh IV, and Ghulam Muḥammad Ghawth Khān Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh V.

The author of this manuscript is Muḥammad Karīm Khayru'd-Dīn Ḥasan Ghulām Zāmin, son of Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Ḥātīz Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur Ṣamsām Jang and a grandson of Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I. He was born in 1194 A.H. (1780 A.D.), received the titles Ṣāhibu'd-Dawla Jalādat Jang in 1210 A.H., Khurshīdu'l-Mulk in 1231 A.H., and on his father's death in 1236 A.H. (1820 A.D.) Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur Ṣamsām Jang.

In the beginning of the month of Rajab in the year 1249 A.H. (1834 A.D.), Muḥammad Karīm, while living at Madras, paid homage to Nawwāb Aẓīm Jāh Bahādur¹ who directed him to write up a history of the Nawwāb's great ancestor, Ghulām Ḥusayn 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II, similar to the poet Abjadī's famous Anwarnāma.² Muḥammad Karīm set to work, and finished the writing of this book in 1252 A.H. (1837 A.D.).

This book is, in the language of the author, composed of four gulzārs (parts) and each gulzār is divided into four guldastas (chapters). Thus there are in all sixteen guldastas. Each guldasta is adorned with a number of rangs (sections).

The present volume includes the translation of the first three parts and a few chapters of the fourth part of Sawānīḥāt-i-Mumtāz, and carries the history of the Carnatic Nawwābs from the last years of the reign of Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I to the death of his son, Ghulām Ḥusayn 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II. This period, comparatively short as it is, includes the history of one of the most interesting personages in the family of Anwar that ruled the Carnatic. This Part III in the series may not have such considerable historical importance as the Part II, but it is superior to the latter in details of social life of the period to which it relates. On the whole, it may be safely said that, allowing for the great crisis through which the country was passing, when European trading companies, especially the English East India Company, were beginning to dominate the land and lord over the native rulers, the period of 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II is not without its significance either social or historical. Before passing to the consideration of these details, a brief sketch may be given of 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II.

Ghulām Husayn 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was the eldest son of Muḥammad Ālī Nawwāb Wālājāh I by his first wife Khadīja Nawwāb Bēgam, born in Muḥarram 1161 A.H. (31st December 1747 A.D.). He was named 'Abdul-Walī by Nawwāb Anwaru'd-Dīn Khān, his grandfather, who got for him the title Umdatul-Umarā from the imperial court of the Pādshāh at Delhi.

He was forty-eight years of age when he became the ruler of the Carnatic. His political relationship with the English East India Company was never happy; but he was enthusiastic in his love and affection for Ṭippū Sultān, the ruler of Mysore.

'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was a scholar, and a poet. He must have been practising the art of poetry from his younger days. He has a *diwān*¹ to his credit. Some of his verses are included in the appendices to this book. From what we have of his works, it will be fully apparent how intensely conventional and artificial the style of poetry was in his days.

A close reading of the book gives us the impression that 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was an amiable, but a weak ruler, ill-fitted to grapple with the fearful peril which overshadowed the last years of his father and finally overwhelmed him. He was a good scholar, devoted to books, gentle and very considerate towards his relatives but, on the other hand, timid, undecided and ignorant of state-craft. Of the many instances, his relationship with Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his sister, is such as to justify this view. Buḍhī Bēgam, known as Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam² was the third daughter of Muḥammad Ālī Nawwāb Wālājāh I by Khadīja Nawwāb Bēgam.

(1) Anthology or collection of poems.

(2) The first two daughters of Muḥammad Ālī Nawwāb Wālājāh I died in their youth and Sultānu'n-nisā became the senior to her other sisters. See Sources of the History of the Nawwābs of the Carnatic, Part II, p. 9.

Sultānu'n-nisā was junior to Muḥammad Anwar Sayfu'l-Mulk, the third brother of 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. She was married to a nephew of Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I, by name 'Abdu'l-Hādī, with the title Ṣamṣamūd-Dawla, and had children. One of her sons was Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur.

Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam enjoyed the confidence of her brother, 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II. There is a great interest as to the part played by this sister of the Nawwāb. It is unnecessary here to recount the various incidents which show that she was really the power behind the throne. It may be conjectured that the Nawwāb could have promised his sister or at least made her believe that he would nominate her son, Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, as his successor to the throne of the Carnatic. Yet the matter is doubtful, and will, in all probability, never now be certainly cleared up. Convinced at last that she was deceived by her brother, Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam grew very angry and her relationship with him in his last days became unpleasant. On his death, she even refused to allow his coffin to be carried through the Kamān-darwāza of Nuṣrat-maḥall towards her palace.

There is a good deal of doubt about his religious views. His leanings to Shī'ism seem to be evident from the various accounts given in the book. Whether or no there was any truth in the rumour that 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was converted to Shī'ism, he consistently observed the celebrations in the month of Muḥarram. Yet at the end of his life we have also his confessions to Mawlānā 'Abdu'l-'Alī ṣāhib, that he never deviated from Sunnism, the faith of his ancestors. If we exclude consideration of this point, 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was a strict Muslim observing punctiliously the prayers five times a day, and not careless of other religious observances.

'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur had also his hobby. He was an ardent student of alchemy and used to work daily in his alchemy house from 10 o'clock in the morning till noon. Every day he prepared gold weighing about five hūn and distributed it among the poor and the needy at his gate through his attendant, Muḥammad Ma'sūm.

Among the various details of the reign of 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, we get a full account of the last years of Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I till his death in 1795 A.D., and the elaborate ceremonies accompanying the burial of his coffin in Trichinopoly under the vault of Ḥaẓrat Natthar Walī.

To those who believe that Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I was a self-seeking ruler, always dependant upon the English for increasing his own power and position, the account of his last years given in this book will give altogether a different picture. It will be clear that his rule was inspired throughout by considerations of the other world rather than of this.

The death of Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh I destroyed the outward semblance of unity which had hitherto existed between the Carnatic Nawwābs and the English East India Company. From the very moment of his accession to the throne, 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur's readiness to quarrel with the English was apparent, and it became much more conspicuous as time went on. Lord Hobart, the Governor of Madras, was deeply offended by 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur's neglect to inform him of Muḥammad 'Alī Nawwāb Wālājāh's death and more particularly of the celebration of his own coronation. Worse trouble, however, came when Lord Hobart proposed to 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur that certain taluks should be made over to the English in return for the qisṭ money, due to them. Nawwāb ṣāhib insisted that he would pay the qisṭ in cash in accordance with the agreement made with Lord Cornwallis in 1792 A.D., and he was naturally incensed at the unreasonable demand of Lord Hobart. Sir John Shore, the Governor-General, condemned the conduct of Lord Hobart "as repugnant to the treaty of 1792, by which the Nawwāb's rights were guaranteed, and as, in fact, involving a breach of faith".

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III

Lord Hobart appealed to the Directors of the Company in justification of his conduct, and Sir John Shore wrote to Dundas, the President of the Board of Control on 12th January, 1796, that the conduct of Lord Hobart was "most unjustifiable, violent, and indefensible on every principle" and also protested that Lord Hobart's attitude "would suggest to the country powers that convenience was the measure of our good faith". Thus the Governor was foiled in his endeavour and Nawwāb ṣāḥib won his point. Lord Hobart received a letter from Sir John Shore, the Governor-General, instructing him to accept the payment of qisṭ in cash in accordance with the practice observed during the reign of Muḥammad Ālī Nawwāb Wālājāh I. The Governor was further directed to meet the Nawwāb and offer congratulations on his accession to the throne.

There was also another chief reason for the growing dissatisfaction of the Governor with Nawwāb ṣāḥib. One Mr. Barrett, of Portuguese extraction, who was thoroughly proficient in writing and reading English, became the diwān of the Nawwāb. Messrs. Webb and Close¹ give a most unfavourable account of the man. He was, according to them, "of the worst type of native Portuguese; equally destitute of education, manners, and knowledge". But from this book, Mr. Barrett appears to be a wise, prudent and clever man. He won the esteem of the Nawwāb in the following manner. On one occasion the date prescribed for the payment of the qisṭ by the Nawwāb to the Company drew near and the Nawwāb had no money. Mr. Barrett, who met the Nawwāb in those anxious days, undertook to arrange for the payment of the qisṭ a day before the appointed date. After taking leave of the Nawwāb,

(1) After the death of Ghulām Ḥusayn 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Nawwāb Wālājāh II, Messrs. Webb and Close were appointed by the English Company as commissioners to interview the Nawwāb's heir and ascertain the conditions under which his accession would be allowed.

INTRODUCTION

Mr. Barrett arranged with an English banker for the payment of the qisṭ to the English Company, got the treasury receipt for the amount paid, and brought it to the Nawwāb. As soon as the Nawwāb saw the receipt, he was very much delighted and from that day Mr. Barrett became his dīwān. The Nawwāb honoured him with the titles Colonel and Bahādur. Rai Reddi Rao and Rai Anand Rao became the peshkārs under Mr. Barrett. The position occupied by Mr. Barrett, and the profound influence that he began to exercise over the administration must have made Mr. Barrett unpopular with the officers of the English East India Company, and this might have developed into one of the chief causes of friction between Nawwāb ṣāhib and the Madras Council.

That the English Company, later on, might have overcome its prejudices against Mr. Barrett, is clear from the fact that Mr. Barrett was responsible for the entry of the English army into the Bāgh, the Nawwāb's residence, when 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was on his death-bed.

The arrival of General Harris¹ and Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur² at Madras after the subjugation of the Fort of Seringapatan and the death of Ṭippū Sultān, and their interview with Nawwāb ṣāhib are worthy of note. The information of General Harris, the victorious English general, about the fall of Seringapatan, inflamed the Nawwāb with anger against the English, and stirred up his sympathy for Ṭippū Sultān, his late powerful contemporary, but, timid as he was, he composed himself before the English General to show ostensibly his joy at the victory of the English. In the account of the interview of Mīr 'Ālam, 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur displayed his vanity, the usual characteristic of the Indian rulers of his day. He says that the ṣūba of the Carnatic is 'a powerful state, for we are distinguished from others by the manṣab i.e., wizārat-i-ṣūbadār of the ṣūba of the Carnatic,' and that he will not be satisfied merely with the civilities and etiquette prevalent in the Aṣaf-jāhī darbār.

The machinations of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam to prevent the recognition of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur as heir-apparent, Ja'far Ālī's attempt to kill Nawwāb ṣāhib, and the Company's interest in the succession afford interesting reading. 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur sets forth the position beautifully thus: "I intend my son for the throne; Sayfu'l-Mulk¹ intends that the throne is for him; my senior sister has in mind that her son is meant for the throne after me; and the frangs are waiting for their opportunity. But it shall be as the supreme Ruler wills"

The serious illness of the Nawwāb, the increase of the English influence and their interest in the question of succession, the Nawwāb's waṣiyyat-nāma written in his own hand in the name of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son, the consequent displeasure of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, and the misunderstanding between herself and her brother,—these details make the last pages of the book specially interesting.

The present volume is valuable again in that it contains accounts of a number of marriage celebrations which show how matches were made, the character of the celebrations essential to different members of the royal family, and the amounts spent on such festivities. The book also abounds in details in regard to the ceremonies at the time of the betrothal, wedding, gifts to the bride, procession of the bridegroom and home-coming of the bride.

The numerous trips, picnics, and visits to shrines and tombs described in several pages of the book show the nature of the life led by aristocrats of the day. They also indicate that the Nawwāb had personal relationship with every member of the family and that he was the favourite of the people at large.

It may be said in conclusion that the period of 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur marks, on the whole, the transformation not only of political power from one hand to another, but also of transmigration of ideas in our land. Politically, it is true, the Carnatic ceased to enjoy a separate national existence being merged in the growing British power, but in the intellectual domain also it began to lose its Muslim identity and declare itself in favour of alien culture and ideas.

Sawānīhāt-i-Mumtāz, the original Persian manuscript from which the English translation is made, is written in a style, not very good, at times very colloquial, and even careless and is marked by many forms of expression peculiar only to the author. The translator has attempted to give the correct forms in the glossary at the end of the volume.

The editor is highly indebted to the ready and generous help of Rao Sahib C. S. Srinivasachariar, M.A., Professor of History, Annamalai University S. India, for the valuable historical notes.

PART III

SAWĀNIHĀT-I-MUMTAZ

In the name of Allāh, the Beneficent, the Merciful.

PLENTIFUL praise and profuse thanks are due to the Lord, the Glorious, and the Powerful Who invested every corner of the world in beautiful robes of variegated colours, Who in His perfect wisdom illuminated the earth and the heavens with two lamps namely the sun and the moon, Who settled His creations—genii, mankind, animals, plants and minerals—in the world to worship Him and celebrate His praise, and Who lighted up the lantern of the body of man in particular with the light of wisdom.

“O Lord! Thou alone art Potent and Majestic;
O Lord! Thou alone art the Eternal Judge;
Thou alone art the Creator of the heavens;
Thou alone art the Creator of the earth;
Thou alone art the Creator of the prophets;
Thou alone art the splendour of the universe;
Thou alone illuminated the spheres;
And lit the land and sea.”

HISTORY OF THE NAWWABS OF THE CARNATIC III

In praise of the chief of the apostles, the last of the prophets, viz., Muḥammad the chosen. (May Allāh's peace and blessings be on him, his family and his followers.)

A thousand salutations are due to the chief of the apostles Aḥmad the select, Muḥammad the chosen, to his family which is pure, and to his followers who are great, for, says the Lord of the Universe: "But for you I would not have created the various spheres."

"The creation of time and space is due to him;
The existence of the world is due to him;
Muḥammad is the king of the heaven and the earth;
Muḥammad is the rose in the garden of Faith;
Muḥammad is the chief of the apostles;
Muḥammad is the king of kings in both the worlds;
Muḥammad is the sardār of the prophets
vide-licet :

The throne of God rested under his foot.

Miraculous power had he, that king of the land and the sea.

He beckoned to the moon and it split into two;¹

Muḥammad is the rose and Ālī² the essence of the rose;

(1) This refers to the splitting of the moon, which is a matter of controversy. The 54th sūra entitled al-qamar (the moon) begins thus:

"The hour drew nigh and the moon did rend asunder. If they see a sign, they turn aside and say: A powerful magic."

Mawlānā Muḥammad Ālī has attempted to explain the significance of this occurrence.

See Mawlānā Muḥammad Ālī, Translation of the holy Qurān without Arabic text, 1928. p. 528 and 529 n. 1.

(2) Ālī was the son of Abū Ṭālīb and a cousin german, to the Prophet Muḥammad. He married Fāṭima, the daughter of Muḥammad and had by her three sons Ḥasan, Ḥusayn, and Muḥsin, the last of whom died in Between these two was Fāṭima the fragrance of the rose;

Ḥasan and Ḥusayn came out like otto which perfumed space and time.

A thousand benedictions, peace, and greetings be on his followers night and day.

The author's supplication for assistance, from the Exalted Creator

O Lord! In the names of the noble Prophet, his respectable family, and his revered followers, grant long life to the patron of this book, keep him safe and sound for ever; his name is Aẓīm happily coupled with Jāh; he is the refuge of the distressed.

O Merciful Lord! I proclaim the name of the author of this book; his original name is Muḥammad Karīm; fulfil his needs quickly. This is my desire night and day.

O Lord! In the name of Muḥammad the chosen, pardon all our sins.

Reason for compiling this chronicle

This humble servant was born in the year 1194 A.H. [1780 A.D.] and the chronogrammatic name is Ghulām Āl-i-Muḥammad. His noble parents blessed him with the name of Muḥammad Karīm Khayru'd-Dīn Ḥasan Ghulām Zāmin. His father's name was Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Hāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur Šamsām Jang (peace be on him) son of Muḥammad Khayru'd-Dīn Khān Bahādur the elder (peace be on him), son of Abdu'l-Ḥakīm Khān Shahīd, son of Shaykh Muḥammad Khayrullāh, son of Shaykh Abdu'l Wālī, the eldest son of Shaykh Muḥammad Munawwar, a resident of Gopāmaw.

This humble servant is also the grandson of his highness Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Khān Bahādur, (nestled in paradise) being the second son of Nawwāb 'Umdat-u'n-nisā Bēgam alias Fataḥ Bēgam ṣāḥiba well known as Ṣāḥib-Zādi-i-Khurd, youngest daughter of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad 'Alī Khān Bahādur the beloved son of Nawwāb Shahīd Muḥammad Anwaru'd-Dīn Khān Bahādur (peace be on him), son of Ḥājī Mūḥammad Anwar, the youngest son of Shaykh Muḥammad Munawwar.

This humble servant was honoured in the year 1207 A.H. [1792-3 A.D.] by the exalted Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Khān Bahādur (nestled in paradise) with the title of Muḥammad Karīm Khān Bahādur, and was favoured with a purple dushāla. During the reign of my senior uncle, the exalted Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Nawwāb 'Umdat-u'l-Umarā Bahādur (peace be on him), I was honoured in the year 1210 A.H. [1795-6 A.D.] with the title of Ṣāḥibu'd-Dawla Jalādat Jang and was presented with nīm-āstīn, and a green rumāl-i-shāl from among his own robes, and permitted to wear also the bandī; during the reign of the exalted Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Nawwāb Aẓimu'd-Dawla Bahādur (peace be on him), my cousin brother, the beloved son of my uncle, I was honoured in the year 1231 A.H. [1815-16 A.D.] with the title of Khurshīdu'l-Mulk Ṣāḥibu'd-Dawla Jalādat Jang Bahādur, presented with nawbat and ghariyāl; during the reign of the exalted Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh 'Umdat-u'l-Umarā Nawwāb Aẓam Jāh Bahādur (peace be on him), and after the demise of my father in the month of Jumādiu'l-Awwal in the year 1236 A.H. [Feb.-Mar., 1821 A.D.] I was honoured with the title of Khurshīdu'l-Mulk Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur Ṣamṣām Jang, and was permitted to play nawbat and ghariyāl. to the boundless grace, kindness and favours of the Nawwāb, great hope of attaining further distinction in view of my rank, dignity, and the happy completion of this book Sawānīhāt-i-Mumtāz.

On Thursday the first of the auspicious month of Rajab, in the year 1249 A.H. [Nov.-Dec., 1833 A.D.] this humble servant, a resident of the town of Madras, had been to the exalted Nawwāb Āzīm Jāh Sirāju'l-Umarā Bahādur (may his bounties last for ever) to pay his respects at 9 o'clock in the morning. The benevolent Nawwāb, who was perusing the chronicle dealing with the administration of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur (nestled in paradise), was gracious enough to address this humble servant as follows:

“ All the events relating to the reign of your grandfather namely Nawwāb ṣāhib (nestled in paradise), are published through the official gazettes, and in the history of Tūzak-i-Wālājāhī, which was compiled by the order of Janāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur¹, your uncle. Other details relating to the reign of that Nawwāb, which Mīr Ismā'īl Khān Abjadī had written in his Anwarnāma are also well known. But as for the events pertaining to the reign of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II, your senior uncle, nothing is known, for the events in that reign were not chronicled; nor did any one write the history of that period. So if a book containing the events in that reign, and the happenings of that period is compiled, it will give me immense pleasure. By the grace of God, there is none at present in the Wālājāhī family like you who has seen those days and who is honourable. You are also an expert in the knowledge of most of the facts of the period of your senior uncle, Janāb Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur (peace be on him). You have thus a very good knowledge of the subject, and it behoves you to chronicle those details which you had witnessed and heard in that period."

(1) He was the fourth son of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur by his first wife Khadīja Bēgam, known as Nawwāb Bēgam.

It was Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh who gave the order that Tūzak-i-Wālājāhī should be compiled, and not Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur.

I, an ignorant man, accepted the command of the Nawwāb with great respect, and submitted, "All the affairs relating to the reign of my senior uncle and most of the events that happened during that glorious administration, had been entered in the registers in chronological order, by the mutaṣaddīs in the office of the sarkār. But the facts which have come to the knowledge of this ignorant man through investigation, will be reduced to writing, even though this suppliant is not acquainted with the art of writing history, and never had an opportunity to do such work. Yet, by the grace of the Generous Lord, the support of the Prophet of the Merciful (peace be on him) and the favour, benevolence and kindness of the Nawwāb, I have strong hope knowing the wisdom contained in the verse, 'Attempt the task with a stout heart, the thorns yield themselves to become a nosegay.' The Great Gardener will water this young garden of hope, which may eventually bring forth beautiful flowers. But there is the saying, 'Man is a compound of mistakes and forgetfulness.' If any omission or mistake in these useless pages strike the fortunate eye of the Nawwāb or of the intelligent the kindness of the exalted Nawwāb is relied on to overlook them in his liberality and forgiveness, for 'To err is human, to forgive divine.' Thus there is the hope that he would forgive and honour me."

The Nawwāb was gracious enough to address me further thus: "From every point of view you have an expert knowledge of these events. On this assumption I entrust this work to you; I also appoint as your assistants Muḥabbat 'Alī Khān, son of Raḥmān 'Alī Khān the elder (peace be on him) who is an intelligent person and an old servant of the sarkār, and Mir

With the help of these two men, you can get the work done in a proper manner and present it to us so that it may be the cause of our satisfaction and of your reputation as well as a monument for ages to come."

Therefore, I, an ignorant man, was afraid that disobedience to the command of the benevolent Janāb Nawwāb ṣāhib, meant disrespect, for it was a 'command too high to be disobeyed.' Hence I readily accepted it.

By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, this work was begun on the 11th of Rajab in the year 1249 A.H. [24th Nov., 1833 A.D.]. The following details are related in it:

1. The initiation of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur in spiritual discipleship by Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur.

2. The facts relating to the youth of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur beginning from the 17th of Rabī'u'th-thānī in the year 1209 A.H. [11th Nov., 1794 A.D.] and ending with the demise of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur.

3. The coronation of the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur on the 2nd of Rabī'u'th-thānī in the year 1210 A.H. [16th Oct., 1795 A.D.] and other events till the demise of the Nawwāb on the 3rd of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1216 A.H. [15th July, 1801 A.D.].

4. The adornment of the throne of the kingdom of the Carnatic by the exalted Nawwāb Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur on the 19th of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1216 A.H. [31st July, 1801 A.D.] and his demise on the 10th of Shawwāl in the year 1234 A.H. [2nd Aug., 1819].

PART I

1209-1210 A.H. [1794—1796 A.D.].

FIRST CHAPTER.

The initiation of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur in spiritual discipleship by Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Walājāh Bahādur and other details.

It was the practice with the exalted Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Walājāh Bahādur to decorate every year for seven nights from the 11th to the 17th of the holy month of Rabī'ul-th-thānī Kalas-maḥall with farsh and green bānāt, and light it with chandeliers, kanwal, and hanging branched candlesticks of several colours. The outer hall towards the hawz would be furnished with a highly decorated pavilion, and a throne of green colour with embroidery. Two green banners in the name of Ḥaṣrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī (may greetings and salutations be on his forefathers) would be erected in front of the two pillars of the pavilion. The arrangements of these would be in the hands of Sālār Jang Muḥammad Najīb Khān Bahādur. Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur would be appointed to collect all those who had the good fortune to become disciples; and Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib to lead the thanksgiving prayer performed in two genuflexions. Finishing the after-sunset-prayer in congregation, the Nawwāb came to the 'ibādat khāna every night from the 11th to the 16th at about 8 o'clock, sat on the prayer carpet, invited to his generous presence through Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur all those who sought happiness, gave them guidance and advice in accordance with the regulations of the Faith, and thus admitted them as his disciples.

On the 17th night of the month of Rabī'ūth-thānī in the year 1209 A.H. [11th November 1794 A.D.] he arranged to furnish the building with adornments of more than usual splendour. All the lanterns were lit with wax-candles. The shaykhs, the learned, and the pious were assembled together. As he was wont to do for years, he put on, after finishing the after-sunset-prayer, the green dress of shaykhs, wore the crown of the khilāfat, and round his happy neck the rosary composed of one hundred big onyx stones, a holy relic of his religious guide, and held in his hand an ordinary olive rosary for the purpose of saying his salutations. He took in his company Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī, and other shaykhs; he adorned the throne with his presence, and requested Mawlānā 'Abdu'l-'Alī Ṣāhib to sit on his right. Then he called to his presence Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib and spoke happily as follows:

“Formerly I honoured you with the khilāfat of Qādiriyya.¹ By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, I desire at present to bestow glory on the light of my eye, the fortunate and the intelligent 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, the crown prince, by granting him the khilāfat of the illustrious Chishtiyya² family.” Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, who was then present in

(1) This is an ascetic order of faqīrs instituted by Sayyid 'Abdu'l-Qādir al-Jilānī, 561 A.H. [1165 A.D.] surnamed Pir-dastagīr, whose shrine is in Baghdād. It is the most popular religious order amongst the sunnī Muslims in India and elsewhere in Asia.

The Qādiriyya order practise both the silent and the audible form of service, reject music and singing, wear green turbans, and one of their garments must be ochre-coloured. The recital of the blessing of the Prophet (durūd) is a conspicuous part of their rites.

(2) The Chishtī trace their origin to Abū Ishāq, ninth in succession from 'Alī, son-in-law of the Prophet, settled at Chisht in Khurāsān. One of his disciples Khwāja Mu'īnu'd-Dīn settled at Ajmer (1142-1236 A.D.). His successor was Quṭbud-Dīn Bakhtiyār Kākī, buried near the Quṭb Minār in Old Delhi. The dargāh at Ajmer was constantly visited by the Emperor Akbar.

the assembly, was honoured with the rank of the khilāfat of Chishtiyya, and initiated into the teachings of that sect. He also invited Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān, Ghulām Asadullāh Khān, Muḥammad Karīm Khān, Ḥabībullāh Khān, Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān, his own five grandsons, and other persons who sought the honour of discipleship, gave them guidance and advice in accordance with the regulations of the Faith and thus exalted them by admitting them as his disciples. Then he honoured Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib by choosing him to lead the thanksgiving prayer offered in two genuflexions.

Section 1.

Nawwāb Azīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and other persons, had already been favoured with the distinction of discipleship by the exalted Nawwāb. Abdu'l Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥaẓrat Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, Mubāriz Jang Bahādur, Ḥashmat Jang Bahādur, Ṣādiq Alī Khān Bahādur, and others who had attained already the happiness of discipleship from Ḥaẓrat Raḥmatullāh Ṣāhib, Shāh Abū Saʿīd Ṣāhib, Shāh Abū'l-Layth Ṣāhib, and others became the disciple of the exalted Ḥaẓrat Nawwāb ṣāhib, with a view to please him, and move along with the times.

After finishing the generous work of initiation, the exalted Nawwāb ṣāhib, continued to sit in the same happy majlis on the throne under that flag, shook hands with his disciples from the highest to the lowest, and then said the holy fātiḥa. Then he distributed to every one, high and low, through Sālār Jang Bahādur, Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān, Muḥammad Bashīr Khān,

Members of this order are partial to vocal music, for the Khwāja, their pir, in one of his religious reveries said that singing was the food and support of the soul.

For other details about this sect, see Herklot's Islam in India, (1921) pp. 288-9.

the offerings over which fātiḥa was said in memory of the holy, Ḥaẓrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī¹ (peace be on him).

After dissolving the assembly Nawwāb ṣāḥib fixed daily allowances for his poor and needy disciples, caused orders to be written to the officers of his prosperous government directing them to pay such allowances from the income of different taluks, through Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāḥib after informing Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. The Nawwāb affixed his signature and seal to these orders. He also asked all his disciples to be present every Tuesday at about 8 o'clock in the morning to attain happiness by partaking of the sweet khichṛī offered to Ḥaẓrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī. The superintendent of this holy majlis was Ḥāji Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Maghribī Ṣāḥib.

Section 2.

Every year on the 24th of the month of Shawwāl, his happy birthday, the Nawwāb weighed his dress used in the past year including white nīm-āstīns and distributed them as sacred relics through Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāḥib.

Section 3.

One day the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur composed a few verses in Hindī, got them written in big letters on a gold-strewn paper, and presented it in great joy and happiness to the Nawwāb, his exalted father, and spiritual guide, as an acknowledgment for the grant of the rank of the khilāfat-i-chishtiyya. The exalted Nawwāb perused it and smiled, and handed it over to Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, 'Alī Dil Khān, Ṣādiq 'Alī Khān, Nūru'd-Dīn Muḥammad Khān and Hashmat Jang. The verses are:

“If you wish to see the features of Allāh
Go and look at the countenance of Wālājāh,

(1) 'Abdul-Qādir al-Jilānī is referred to respectfully as Ḥaẓrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī (Beloved of the Divine Lord).

CH. 2—YOUTH OF NAWWĀB UMDATU'L-UMARĀ

It is true; Shaykhjī says

That 'arifs see the semblance of baytullāh in the butkhāna.

If you wish to verify this, look at yourself.

The aspect of shūhinshāh is hidden in His subjects.

If any one worships him, they say it is blasphemy,

And the worshippers at the shrine are termed blasphemers.

O Mumtāz, stand up for truth, and behold the great beauty.

The semblance of the Prophet of Allāh is in 'Alī Murtaẓā."

Other details in this connection are not known to this humble servant. He has put in writing whatever he has seen or remembered. The rest of it Allāh knows better.

SECOND CHAPTER.

The details relating to the youth of Nawwāb Umdatull-Umarā Bahādur; the summoning of Hakīm Aḥmadullah Khān from Haydarābād; the arrival of Ruknūddawla Bahādur from Haydarābād, and the marriage of Abdull-Husayn Khān Bahādur.

During the reign of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad 'Alī Khān, Nawwāb Umdatull-Umarā Bahādur resided from his early days in Bāgh-i-kuhna¹ later on known as Muḥammad-bāgh. As it was not spacious enough, he engaged himself in the year 1209 A.H. [1794 A.D.] when his father was alive, to erect a wooden building according to his own plan, and shifted his residence there. This building came to be known as Fataḥ-chawkī. Adjacent to this he got ready another building covered with tiles for the pursuit of his studies in alchemy.

(1) This may be identified with Amīr Bāgh built before 1798. It was the property of the Nawwāb who frequently lent it to Lord Clive, Governor of Madras, for public entertainments. At a late date the Court of Ṣadr-i-adālat was held there. It was afterwards used by the Agra Bank. Then it became the Elphinstone Hotel and now it is the premises of the Spencer's Hotel, Mount Road, Madras.

There were always present in his company five sayyids from morning till evening and another set of sayyids from sunset till midnight who offered prayers and transmitted to him the efficacy of their prayer by the breath of their mouths. Besides these, there were servants who attended on him during the day and spent the night in the chawkī in Bāgh-i-kuhna outside the compound of Fataḥ-chawkī.

Reliable attendants and managers like Mīr Ismāʿīl Khān Bahādur son of Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, Taqī ʿAlī Khān the house steward, Quṭbʿūd-Dīn Khān the bakhshī, Rahmān ʿAlī Khān Bahādur the dārughā of the kuchahrī, ʿAlī Nawāz Khān the urṣ-bēgī, Muḥammad Ḥasan Khān the mīr-munshī, Asadʿūd-Dīn Khān the munshī, Muḥammad Muʿīnuʿd-Dīn the copyist, Sayyid Nūr ʿAlī the news-writer in palaces, Lāla Bhawānī Prashād, and Kīshan Rao the clerk, besides other clerks, and dārughas of different departments, were present in the darbār of the exalted Nawwāb attending to their duties from 10 o'clock in the morning till evening.

Mr. Barrett¹ who was thoroughly proficient in writing and reading English was also an expert in handicrafts, and in repairing gharī and other articles of European make. He had great skill in his work, was very wise and sagacious, prudent and enthusiastic in the work entrusted to him. Captain Smith²

(1) The author of this book writes his name as Bard and Bart. His correct name was Thomas Barrett. He was entrusted with the administration of the revenues of the Nawwāb. According to the report of Messrs. Webbe and Close, he was "of the lowest tribe of native Portugese, equally destitute of education, manners, and knowledge."

(2) The author might have meant Brigadier General Joseph Smith who was for a long time adviser to Nawwāb Muḥammad ʿAlī Wālājāh on all matters including the army.

was distinguished for his services as the sardār of the cavalry and armed forces. Mr. Johnson¹, the son of Mr. Smith, was appointed to organize and train the armed forces and the cavalry.

Muḥammad Darwēsh and Mīr Ja'far 'Alī presented themselves before the Nawwāb at 11 o'clock in the night at bedtime and narrated or read to him stories.

Section 1.

Daily routine of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur.

The Nawwāb went to bed at about 12 o'clock in the night, and got up before 6 o'clock in the morning. He finished his ablutions with hot water that was got ready on a lamp near the place where wood of aloes was burnt in front of him, and said the early-morning-prayer. Then he sat facing the qibla, and said tasbīḥ taught to him by his noble mother, namely, the late honoured and revered Khādija Bēgam known as Ḥaẓrat Nawwāb Bēgam sāḥiba. He said tasbīḥ counting regularly over his fingers till the rising of the sun. He engaged himself in the same manner after evening-prayer, usually till sunset, when he got up for the sunset-prayer. When he was engaged in saying tasbīḥ, he never spoke to any one. He was very regular in this duty throughout his life.

After the morning prayer was over and when the sun had risen, he sat till about 8 o'clock in the big hall of Fataḥ-chawkī, giving audience to visitors. Sometimes 'Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, 'Abdu'l-Ma'būd Khān Jamshīd Jang, Ḥāfiẓ Ḥasan 'Alī Khān Rustam Jang, Ḥaẓrat Mawlānā 'Abdu'l-'Alī Ṣāḥib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāḥib Sāwī, paid a visit to the exalted Nawwāb. Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur came secretly once a week during the night and discussed with the Nawwāb confidential matters pertaining to the wālājāhī darbār.

(1) It cannot be ascertained whether Johnson was the son of Smith mentioned above.

At 8 o'clock in the morning Nawwāb ṣāhib came out of the hall and sat at the dining table for about three-quarters of an hour. First, he granted a portion of his royal repast to those who used to say durūd, and then took his meal. On alternate days, he invited Muḥammad Ālī Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur¹, the light of his eyes, his beloved son, and ate in his company. Sometimes he invited for breakfast Ābdul-Karīm Khān known as Khān Bahādur, his second son. On many occasions the Nawwāb kept him in his company, and arranged for instruction through teachers learned in every branch of knowledge. Besides, he took great care to teach him the English language also.

After breakfast the Nawwāb sat alone for an hour till 10 o'clock, smoking hookah and pondering over problems. From 10 o'clock till noon he worked in the alchemy house and prepared six bānī of gold which weighed five huns. He honoured Siddī Muḥammad Fīrūz Khān, an old loyal and trustworthy servant of the sarkār with the appointment of dārughā of the alchemy house, and entrusted him with all the work attached to that office, and no one else had access to that place. But occasionally the Nawwāb invited Ābdul-Karīm Khān Bahādur, his son, and made him work in the alchemy house. The gold which was got ready the previous day was distributed the next day as nadhṛ to Allāh among the poor and the needy at his gate through Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm, his attendant and an officer of the sarkār.

Section 2.

The pillow-money, amounting to five rupees per day and one hundred and fifty rupees per month, was in charge of Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm. The Nawwāb sent that amount to Ḥaẓrat Mawlānā Ābdul-Ālī Ṣāhib through Mawlawī Imām

(1) After the death of his father, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur in 1801 at the age of 53, this prince could not accept the terms offered to him by Lord Clive. So Nawwāb Āḡimud-Dawla Bahādur was elevated to the throne of the Carnatic.

CH. 2—DAILY ROUTINE OF NAWWAB UMDATU'L-UMARA

Bakhsh for the purpose of distributing it among the students. Every day a rupee which was sent from the palace of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, was tied on the upper arm of the Nawwāb to seek protection of the Imām Zāmin¹ (peace be on him) against disaster. Thirty rupees thus collected in a month together with the *nadh*r of five rupees to the crescent made a total of thirty-five rupees. This sum was sent as *nadh*r to Ḥaẓrat Mīr Mahdī Ṣāhib, the calligraphist, through Sayyid Nūr 'Alī.

The Nawwāb took rest in Fataḥ-chawkī from 12 o'clock to 1 P.M. After waking up, he went on some days to the house of Muḥammad 'Alī Husayn Khān's mother, Mubāra-ku'n-nisā Bēgam known as Ghasīti Bēgam, who lived near Fataḥ-chawkī. After staying there for about three-quarters of an hour he returned to his own residence in Fataḥ-chawkī, where he engaged himself till afternoon in playing shaṭranj with Mīr Abū Tālib Khān and others or sometimes in reading books on history, studying anthologies or trying to compose verses.

Section 3.

Every day at about 4 o'clock he went out sometimes in a chārat with a body-guard, for a drive in the big garden as far as the gate of the dārūl-amāra of the big *dawān-khāna*² of

(1) Zāmin means 'one who is responsible for another, or enters into bail for him.'

Yak rupaya bābat zamānat-i-Imām Zāmin, means 'a rupee worn as a protective against disaster or death.'

It is a general custom when a person is about to travel, or when evil befalls him, to tie a copper coin and a metal ring in a bit of cloth dyed with turmeric in the name of the personal guardian, the saint Imām Zāmin, and to wear this tied on the left upper arm. When the person reaches his destination in safety or gets rid of trouble, he takes off the coin, and sometimes adding a few more coins to it, buys sweets, or makes cakes or stew and offers the fātiḥa in the name of the saint.

Kalas-maḥall; sometimes he drove in a suksāwan with two armed guards, two orderlies, two mace-bearers, a corporal and two attendants and got down near the mango tree at the gate of Kalas-maḥall. He opened his knapsack and put on his full dress: a gown made in Europe, or a flower-painted gown with green borders made in Bengal, and a waist-band from Guzerat. He wore a silk rūmāl to cover the scar of the wound on his right fore-finger which had been cut off by a gun shot.

In 1204 A.H. [1790 A.D.] a year after the demise of Ḥaḡrat Nawwāb Amīru'l-Umarā Bahādur, the men in the army under Badru'l-Islām Khān Bahādur and Muḥammad Burhān the commandant, collected in large numbers and created disturbance at the big gate¹ of the bāgh of the Nawwāb on account of the outstanding wages. They were armed with guns, muskets, and other implements of war taken from the ūshūr-khāna of the sarkār. When Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur received information of this fact, he presented himself in obedience to the command of Nawwāb Wālājāh, at the big gate mentioned above for the purpose of advising the rebels. There were also present with him Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, Mr. Smith the 'uhda-dār in the army of the prince, and other officers. Just then the sepoys were very clamorous and uproarious. Mr. Smith drew out his sword to threaten them. As soon as the sword was drawn out, one of the sepoys put his loaded gun on his shoulders and aimed at Mr. Smith. He moved aside, but Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur beckoned to the sepoy with his right hand. Just then the sepoy had touched the match of the gun with his fore-finger. As fate would have it, the bullet carried away the right fore-finger of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, passed through the back of the umbrella-bearer wounding him, and then through the left side of the body of Hāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur tearing his skin to the extent of one span. By the grace of God, the cords of life of these men were very strong; their wounds were cured after a long time by the treatment of English doctors, and Shaykh Ādam the hajjām.

The Nawwāb dressed himself up in the manner described above, went to Kalas-maḥall and presented himself before the exalted Ḥaẓrat Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh 'Umdatul-Mulk Sirāju'd-Dawla Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Khān Bahādur Zāfar Jang. He paid his obeisance in accordance with the convention and then took his seat. He submitted his own petitions and the correspondence with the Governor in Council, for the prince was the vakīl representing the Nawwāb. There were also present in the darbār at that time Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Ṣafdar Jang Bahādur, Ḥashmat Jang Bahādur, Ṣādiq 'Alī Khān Bahādur, 'Alī Dil Khān Bahādur, Qādir Nawwāz Khān, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Hāfiẓ Hājī Maghribī Ṣāhib, and two or three munshīs of the Nawwāb. Every one of these submitted his affairs before the Nawwāb, while the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was a mere spectator.

Section 4.

Ḥaẓrat Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Nuṣrat Jang Bahādur presented himself now and then before Nawwāb Wālājāh about the time of after-noon-prayer. Occasionally he used to submit his own petitions to the Nawwāb. Out of his brotherly love and kindness Nawwāb Wālājāh offered qalyān to Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and he always used to smoke in the company of Nawwāb Wālājāh.

Section 5.

The exalted Nawwāb 'Azīmud-Dawla Bahādur¹ always said the after-noon-prayer in the company of Nawwāb Wālājāh.

(1) He was the son of Amīru'l-Umarā, the second son of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh, who predeceased his father.

Whenever Nawwāb Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur caught sight of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur would overwhelm him with the kindness of a father. The paternal kindness and affection which Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Wālājāh had for the exalted Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur was beyond description. On many an occasion when Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was present in the majlis, the Nawwāb used to address Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur in great joy and happiness thus: "By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, your forehead is exceedingly luminous and resplendent. This indicates that the Creator, Omnipotent Lord, would honour you with glorious and powerful rank by bestowing on you dominion and authority." Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur would pay his obeisance to the Nawwāb for this happy remark¹. But such expressions were highly unpalatable to Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. Yet out of regard for his father's feelings, he outwardly exhibited great kindness to Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur; whenever he met him, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur overwhelmed him outwardly with love.

Section 6.

Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur and others presented themselves at the morning darbār of Nawwāb Wālājāh to pay their obeisance to him. Muḥammad Naṣir Khān and other grandsons of the Nawwāb usually presented themselves at the darbār in the company of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur and ingratiated themselves into favour.

At about 5 o'clock in the evening Nawwāb Wālājāh rose from the evening darbār to say his after-noon-prayer. The exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur took leave of his father and went to the palace of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam known as Buddī Bēgam ṣāḥiba, his senior sister, where he partook of the repast. On some days Ḥaẓrat Karīm'u'n-nisā Bēgam alias Chotī Bēgam, well-known as Ḥaẓrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba, the younger sister of Ḥaẓrat Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur, on some other days, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Naṣīru'l-Mulk Bahādur, Malik'u'n-nisā Bēgam alias Daryā Bēgam well-known as Manjhlī ṣāḥib-zādī, and 'Umdat'u'n-nisā Bēgam alias Fataḥ Bēgam well-known as Chotī ṣāḥib-zādī, all these assembled together at the maḥall of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and had their dinner. Sometimes, once or twice in a week, Nawwāb 'Umdat'u'l-Umarā Bahādur dined with his nephews. After dinner the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdat'u'l-Umarā Bahādur stayed there till about 8 o'clock in the night talking and smoking qalyān. Then he got into a chārat or a suksāwan and drove to Bāgh-i-kuhna also known as Muḥammad-bāgh.

(1) This turned out to be a true prediction. After the death of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, the claims of his son Muḥammad Ali Ḥusayn Khān Tājul-Umarā Bahādur were set aside by the British and Nawwāb Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur was chosen as the ruler of the Carnatic in 1801.

Section 7.

Sometimes his happy temperament inclined to make special arrangements for the zenana by hanging lattice in the hall of the palace of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his senior sister; he invited a company of dancing-girls and musicians including Laṭīfa, Tānū, Ṣājnī known as Sōnā. He directed Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān son of Muḥammad Munīru'd-Dīn Khān and Rām Singh Bayrāgī thus: "Set to music the elegant and significant verses composed by me recently in the following tunes yaman, khamāj, bahāg, lālī, babhās, bharavi, aliyā-bilāval, dhanāsri, and asāvārī, and make the dancing-girls sing them in sweet and pleasant voice. Thus the Nawwāb spent the time from about 8 o'clock in the night till midnight listening to music, and enjoying the nautch. On some days in order to oblige the ladies he asked six handsome and comely dancing-girls to put on suitable dresses for a khraṇṭ dance and enjoyed the tamasha.

(1) Mr. P. Sambamurti, Lecturer in Indian Music, says that the following ragās of South Indian Music closely resemble the tunes mentioned in the text: Yaman=Kalyāṇī; Khamāj=Khamās; Bahāg=Hindustānī Behāg; Lālī=Lālita (but F Sharp or the Prati Madhyama is not used); Babhās=Bhūpālam; Bharavi=Tōḍī; Aliyā-bilāval=A derivative of the Dhira Sankarābharana meḷa; Dhanāsri=Abhēri; Asāvārī=Asāvēri (both the D Natural and D Flat are used in this raga).

On the joyful occasion of the celebration of the birth of Ḥaṣrat Ālī, the commander of the faithful, the leader of the pious, Walīu'llāh and Waṣīu'r-Rasūl,¹ held every year usually in the month of the revered Rajab, the Nawwāb composed in praise of Ḥaṣrat Ālī, some verses in the Hindi language in the form of ghazal. He wrote the verses in pencil and gave them to Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān with the following command: "You should, with the help of Bayrāgī Rām Singh, set these verses to music in tunes favourite with me, and train quickly Sōnā, the dancing girl, so that she may sing forthwith." In obedience to the command, the Khān trained her in about an hour and conducted her to the presence of the Nawwāb. The exalted Nawwāb was extremely pleased with her song. He sent for cash from the maḥall of his sister and gave a present of one hundred rupees to Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān, fifty rupees to Rām Singh, fifty rupees to Sōnā, and fifty rupees to other dancing-girls.

Dargāh Qulī Khān, a witty person, and a companion of Nawwāb ṣāḥib, was, like Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān, of an entertaining nature. Both these amused Nawwāb ṣāḥib by their drollery and pleasantry. The Nawwāb presented Dargāh Qulī Khān also with thirty-five rupees.

Verses composed in praise of the exalted Ālī, peace be on him.

To-day the chastity of God revealed itself to the world,

CH. 2—CRITICISM OF 'UMDATU'L-UMARA'S POEM

When the marriage rites according to law were performed,

The Time spread two masnads:

One on the side of Allāh, the other on the side of the Prophet.

Thereupon the essence of Aḥmad became manifest.

To-day a son is born in the house of god,

Prophet took him as his son-in-law

Through him eleven imāms were revealed,

Divinity was perfected in that house.

O God! keep us in need of their power and characteristic qualities

Through the mediation of the respectable Prophet.

Mumtāz offers prayers and benedictions.

After some days Muḥammad 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān Mustaqīm Jang Nāmī, son-in-law of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba and son of Ḥāmid Alī Khān, wrote the following letter to Mīr Ismā'il Khān Bahādūr with a view to bring it to the notice of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādūr.

"To

The Khān ṣāḥib rejoicing in the possession of great benevolence and kindness.

Salāmun-'alaykum: May it be known:

I have heard that a certain poet, a stranger to this land, had been rude in criticizing the poem of Nawwāb ṣāḥib Mumtāz. He had put it in writing and sent it. He records his objection thus in a verse:

"When the son is born in the house of Allāh,

The sense in 'He begets not'¹ is marred."

I have nothing more to add but hope for your kindness."

(1) This is a quotation from the 11th sūra, al-Ikhlāṣ (the Unity).

1. Say: He, God is One.

2. God is He on Whom all depend.

3. He begets not, nor is He begotten.

4. And none is like Him.

Mīr Ismā'īl Khān Bahādur submitted this letter to the Nawwāb at the time of his drive. On perusing this letter Nawwāb ṣāhib was extremely displeased and flew into a passion. He took out a pencil from his pocket, put the letter on the sukṣāwan, and wrote on the back of that letter the following reply:

“Thou hast not understood, O stupid ass!

In truth the birth-place of Ḥaydar is ka'ba.

When the son is born in the house of Allāh,

How the sense in ‘He begets not’ is marred?”

He also added :

“By God! Who has no peer! out of regard for my senior sister, I do not wish to punish you immediately; I leave the punishment to the Creator; certainly it will come.

The accursed and stupid poet is not in my presence; if he were in my presence now, I would have adorned him with an iron chain and appointed you to teach him poesy. I would have dignified you also with that ornament and sent both of you to the fort of Chandragiri so that the art may be learnt perfectly, for Chandragiri is a fit place for such accursed and mischievous men, and the teacher and the student must remain together in one place till the attainment of knowledge.

Well: In future if such foolish, absurd, and mischievous questions are brought to my notice, by the strength of Allāh!, the tongue and the hand of the culprit will be cut off and he will be kept in perpetual confinement.

God is with us and with you!

Ghulām Ḥusayn.”

Then he directed Mīr Ismā'īl Khān thus: “Send this letter immediately to that accursed man. In future you should not bring to our notice such absurd letters from wicked men. This does not become your position and rank.”

After giving expression to his indignation, the Nawwāb drove in his sukṣāwan, and went as usual to the maḥall of his senior sister for dinner. There he summoned to his presence Shāh Bēgam, the wife of 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān, gave vent to his disgust and said: "In future if such improper behaviour is shown by your husband, by God! all considerations will vanish, and I shall immediately cause him to suffer for his offence in the darbār-i-ām." He also told his senior sister in great anger and disgust all the details, the disobedience, wickedness and foolishness of the Khān. He issued orders prohibiting the Khān from entering the gate of Fataḥ-chawkī, and visiting him. Sultān'u'n-nisā Bēgam also was displeased at the behaviour of her son-in-law and forbade him from entering her house, and from associating with her son 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur.

'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān was very much aroused to a sense of danger when he read the Nawwāb's letter sent through Mīr Ismā'īl Khān Bahādur, and heard about the rebuke of Nawwāb ṣāhib and the exalted Bēgam ṣāhiba. He was terror-stricken, and was subject to a severe strain of sorrow and anguish night and day. He conveyed a message to 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur through Ghulām Asadullāh Khān Bahādur seeking pardon from the Nawwāb for his own error. Five or six months later, on the occasion of the celebration of the happy birth-day of the Nawwāb, 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur after great endeavour secured pardon for the mistake of 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān and also permission for him to pay his obeisance to the Nawwāb. The benevolent Nawwāb did all these out of regard for the affection he bore towards 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. Then the Nawwāb spoke personally to his senior sister and secured permission for 'Izzu'd-Dīn Khān to have social communication with the women's apartments and also to visit the dīwān-khāna of 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur.

Section 8.

The Nawwāb slept in the maḥall of his senior sister when it was too late to go to his own palace after the nautch party, and such other entertainments held in the house of his sister. He slept in the green-chair room of the bāra-darī, contiguous to the maḥall of his sister. On other days he left his sister's house as usual after 8 o'clock in the night in a chārat or suksāwan to Bāgh-i-kuhna also known as Muḥammad-bāgh. Whenever he or his senior sister or her son felt indisposed or took a laxative, he stayed in his sister's palace night and day.

During the sickness of his second sister or his younger sister, or sons of his sisters, and also whenever they took laxative, the Nawwāb slept at night in the room of the bāra-darī contiguous to the maḥall of his senior sister. Early morning his senior sister paid him a visit along with other sisters. They all had their breakfast and dinner with the Nawwāb. After the evening dinner, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur paid a visit as usual to Nawwāb Wālājāh, his noble father. He returned after an hour or two to the maḥall of his senior sister. At 8 o'clock in the night when the gun shot was heard, he started for the bāgh, his own residence.

Section 9.

Sometimes Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur visited the Nawwāb in the bāgh after 10 o'clock in the night and submitted to him in secrecy important matters and other affairs pertaining to the wālājāhī darbār. The exalted Nawwāb also amused himself from 10 o'clock till 12 o'clock in the night, by listening to the music of Rām Singh Bayrāgī, an old musician who played yaktāra, and by Bhawānī Dās Bayrāgī a new musician who used to play the sārangī, and had great skill in his art. The accomplished Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān also sang the new songs composed by the Nawwāb. Now and then the sagacious Qādir Nawāz Khān was permitted to stay in that company, for the Nawwāb regarded him kindly and through him he learnt many details pertaining to the wālājāhī darbār. The Nawwāb had so much regard for him that he purchased a beautiful bāgh

CH. 2—DOINGS OF 'UMDATU'L-UMARĀ IN THE NIGHT

with a building, contiguous to the bāgh of Mr. Wex¹ and opposite to Bāgh-i-kuhna his own residence, and made a present of it to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur. The Khān was often there in that bāgh and during night presented himself before Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. The Nawwāb gave permission to his companions to depart, and himself retired to his sleeping apartments. There he invited Ghulām Murtazā, and Muḥammad Ibrāhīm the commandant, and listened to their reports on every place, maḥall, and other things and gave them further instructions. Then he took hold of the keys of every place, left them on the table opposite to him, and enjoined strictly all the chawkīdārs who were present thus: "Whenever any commandant comes to me you must wake me up."

Then he gave the following order to the commandant:

"If any messenger from the exalted Nawwāb Wālājāh, or from my elder sister, or the second sister, or the younger sister seeks for me late in the night, you must immediately get the keys from Muḥammad Ma'sūm and bring him to me, and at the same time wake me up."

Generally there used to be in his sleeping room women who came through Muḥammad Ibrāhīm the jama'dār. This jama'dār brought them secretly in carriages and sent them after an hour or two. During the time of rest Nawwāb šāhib always invited Mīr Muḥammad Darwēsh, and Muḥammad Ja'far the romancer and story-teller, and listened to their latest tales and stories. Sometimes he seated them near his bed-chamber, and made them narrate stories. Besides his own body-guard he kept some foot-soldiers in the chawkī near the gate of Fatah-chawkī in Bāgh-i-kuhna. They were very alert in their duties. Nawwāb šāhib always had news of their presence or absence. The chawkīdārs in obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb were armed and ready for action. If Nawwāb ṣāhib got information of anyone remaining unarmed in the chawki, he rebuked him severely.

On some days if the Nawwāb was engaged in reading or writing something important, he used to keep awake an hour more than usual. He was always alone when he was busy reading or writing.

Section 10.

The exalted Dulārī Bēgam ṣāhiba the eldest daughter of Ḥaẓrat Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla, was the wife of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. She resided in the old building contiguous to Shādi-maḥall on the highway to the big mosque at Tirmalkarī (Triplicane). This building was purchased from Mubārīz Jang. Nawwāb ṣāhib was displeased with his wife for some reason or other. He used to go to her palace on occasions of necessity like the offering of fātiḥa during the month of Rajab and such other occasions. But the exalted Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba invited her to her own palace during the festive celebration on the birthday of the Nawwāb. In great pomp and magnificence, she seated both the Nawwāb and his wife on the throne and asked 'Umdatul-Umarā Bēgam, her own younger sister, to adorn them with flowers got for the occasion. Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam presented her younger sister with five hundred rupees cash, and a tray containing khilāt made of silk and cotton.

Section 11.

Generally during summer months the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur made arrangements for the zenana either on the terrace of the palace of his second sister or in the diwān-khāna of Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, took in his company the senior sister, other ladies, guests, and others, designing to go to the beach on moonlight nights or to see the rising of the sun or the moon.

CH. 2—UMDATU'L-UMARA CELEBRATES MUHARRAM

He went to the beach by the side of Hasht-bangla¹ adjoining the Bāra-dārī. In Hasht-bangla at about midday he seated the two new-come vīna singers opposite to the windows of the women's apartments and listened to the sārang rāg.

The Nawwāb went in the afternoon to the house of his senior sister and had his dinner. Once in a month or two he invited to his own bāgh his sister's children and others, sat on the terrace and enjoyed the tamasha of tigers, bears, elephants, camels, horses, and the wrestling matches among pahlawāns from 9 o'clock till 11 o'clock. Sometimes he gathered all of them one night in the palace of his senior sister, and from nine till about midnight engaged them in playing the game bahā-kānt which was played consecutively for four nights. On the final day the Nawwāb honoured them all with large presents.

Section 12.

The celebration of the holy 'urs of the exalted Hazrat Imām Husayn (peace be on him) had its commencement from the first of Muharram. The Nawwāb gave instructions on that day to decorate Bāgh-i-kuhna known as Muhammad bāgh with lanterns and wax-candles, planted the ancient banner of Haydar, and directed the rawza-khwāns to be busy in their prayer till 9 o'clock in the night. Nawwāb ṣāhib slept every night till the 10th of Muharram in the room behind the holy ensign. On the night of the 10th, he summoned the khallāṣī from the Company who set up innumerable lights. At about midnight he carried that banner of Haydar in a howdah going on a procession from the bāgh as far as Tirmalgarī and returned at about 3 o'clock in the morning. On the morning of the 10th of Muḥarram after the early-morning-prayer the holy banner was washed and entrusted to its owner. Then the Nawwāb appointed Mīr Ismāʿīl Khān Bahādur, Taqī ʿAlī Khān Bahādur, Quṭb-ud-Dīn Khān, Raḥmān ʿAlī Khān Bahādur, Shujāʿat ʿAlī Khān, and distributed charities in the name of Ḥaẓrat Sayyiduʿsh-shuhadā (chief of the martyrs, peace be on him) to all miskīns and the needy giving each a piece of khādī and a rupee. In the same manner the anniversary of the death of Nawwāb Bēgam ṣāḥiba, his noble mother, was celebrated on the 14th of Jumādiuʾl-awwal and charities were distributed in his own presence at Bāgh-i-kuhna through the persons mentioned above. The cash and the cost of cloth distributed on those occasions amounted to four thousand and five hundred rupees per fātiḥa. These charities were distributed in front of the building in the bāgh while the Nawwāb and his companions sat in the upper storey of the building. There used to be a huge crowd; although alms were distributed from morning till evening, there would be still some omissions, and it would be continued next day by order of the Nawwāb.

Section 13.

Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, the first son of Nawwāb ʿUmdat-ʾn-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, was suffering from epilepsy. The yūnānī and miṣrī ḥakīms and doctors felt helpless, and illness increased day by day. One day Nawwāb ʿUmdat-ʾl-Umarā Bahādur spoke respectfully to the exalted Nawwāb Amīruʾl-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad ʿAlī Khān Bahādur about the strange illness of his own eldest nephew. Next day Nawwāb ṣāḥib went to visit the sick person in the house of Nawwāb ʿUmdat-ʾn-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, his younger daughter, along with Nawwāb ʿUmdat-ʾl-Umarā Bahādur, Mubāriz Jang, Sālār Jang and Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur. He saw the sick person, and offered fātiḥa for his recovery. As he was a vigorous youth, the Nawwāb felt great sorrow for him, shed tears and then returned to his own residence. Next day he suggested to Nawwāb 'Umdatul-'Umarā Bahādur and Mubārīz Jang that they should call skilful ḥakīms from Ḥaydarābād. He gave orders for writing an urīṣa to the exalted Nawwāb Aṣaf Jāh Nizāmud-Dawla Bahādurī, besides another letter to Mushīru'l-Mulk Aristū Jāh, the chief minister of Aṣaf Jāh, and sent these through his vakīl to Ḥaydarābād. When the urīṣa reached Nawwāb Aṣaf Jāh Bahādur, an order was issued forthwith to send, immediately to Madras, Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur, a skilful ḥakīm who was a great success in his profession, and rejoiced in the possession of a good rank. The ḥakīm started to Madras, and had come as far as the taluk of Palnār; just then Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur joined to divine mercy by the decree of Allāh, and the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-'Umarā Bahādur succeeded his father.

Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur reached Madras, stayed at the bāgh of Dādī Shāh Shāhib, and reported himself to Nawwāb 'Umdatul-'Umarā Bahādur. Six days later, Nawwāb shāhib sent Qādir Nawāz Khān and Ḥakīm Aḥmād Khān Bahādur to the bāgh to invite Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān and received the Ḥakīm shāhib at the green-chair room in the house of his senior sister. The ḥakīm submitted to the Nawwāb as nadhīr forty rupees and a bound and gilt book being a short treatise on Khulāṣatul-ḥikmat bā mujmal-i-khulāṣatul-ashyā written by himself. The Nawwāb spoke with him kindly for about an hour. When the ḥakīm took leave of the Nawwāb he observed the civilities rendered to guests by presenting him with ḥīr, pāndān, and gulāb-pāsh, and asked Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur and Ḥakīm Aḥmad Khān to act as escorts to him as far as the house of his younger sister where Iftikḥāru'd-Dawla Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, the patient, stayed. He assigned to the hakīm the jāgīr of Kūlī Nellore which yielded an income of twelve thousand rupees per year. Thus the hakīm was appointed to treat Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur.

Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur recovered his health in a short while after undergoing the treatment at the hands of Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur. Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur felt happy and was graciously pleased to confer on the hakīm the title Malikī'ul-ḥukamā (king of hakīms).

Section 14.

The talk of marriage for the son of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam began nine months before the demise of Nawwāb Wālājāh. Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, with the permission of her father and brother, had correspondence with Bakhshī Bēgam ṣāḥiba, the wife of Nawwāb Niẓāmu'd-Dawla Bahādur. As Bakhshī Bēgam ṣāḥiba asked for some poems composed by Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam sent her some of his verses along with presents to Ḥaydarābād.

Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam fixed the marriage of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān, her son, with the daughter of Ghulām Ashraf Khān Bahādur. He was related to the late Ruknu'd-Dawla Bahādur the elder. Both these were high officials in Ḥaydarābād. Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam invited Ghulām Ashraf Khān and his family with great grandeur and magnificence. When he arrived at Madras, he stayed at the bagh of Dādī Shāh Ṣāḥib. In a little while, the new bāgh well-known as the bāgh of Mr. Oakes was set apart for the residence of guests. After a few days Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba sought permission of the exalted Nawwāb Anīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad 'Alī Khān Bahādur, through Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, to fix the marriage on the 15th of Shā'bān in the year 1209 A.H. [7th March, 1795 AD.] and she made everything ready for the marriage.

During the night the bridegroom went in a procession with all paraphernalia and with a number of torch-bearers and dancing-girls. Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, nobles and persons of high rank went to the house of the bride, while Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba also went there with all her sisters and other female relations. The ceremony was over and the bridegroom went back to his residence in the same manner of procession as he came up to the bride's house. The bridegroom presented at his house nadhṛ to Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur and Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur.

THIRD CHAPTER.

An account of the sickness, and the demise of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur in the year 1210 A.H.

The exalted Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur said his after-midnight-prayer and retired to rest. He woke up on the morning of the 15th of the victorious Ṣafar in the year 1210 A.H. [31st August 1795 A.D.] attended to the routine duties and as usual went through the wash on a raised seat. As he was getting down from the seat his foot slipped and he fell down. The thumb-nail of the left foot was crumpled up. It caused swelling and also brought on high fever. The illness increased day by day; all the yūnānī ḥakīms and doctors of the sarkār attended on him, exerting their skill in a thousand ways. Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur also tried his best to make arrangements for the treatment of his father. But the cord of life had become short and the time was drawing near the final journey. His venerable age was 75. All the attempts by way of treatment did not bring him through. The effects of the disease increased day by day; in a short while pus began to come from the shank up to the toe. Seeing this bad symptom all the hakīms despaired of his life and secretly apprised Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur of this fact. Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān also understood his own condition and gave up all hopes of recovery. A week before the fateful day he consoled and comforted the ladies of his family, while sorrowful tears trickled down his cheeks. The doctors of the sarkār accompanied by all the hakīms presented themselves before the Nawwāb on the following day, tied up the shank with bandage, and took leave of the Nawwāb. As Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur was much worried, Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān and other servants enquired secretly about the health of the exalted Nawwāb Wālājāh from Shaykh Ādam Ḥajjām, who waited upon the Nawwāb night and day. Shaykh Ādam said in great sorrow and anguish thus: "The doctors had been making gross mistakes from the beginning of the illness of the Nawwāb, which had very much impaired his health. There is pus all over the shank and the cure seems impossible. It is our bad luck that the shadow of such a compassionate, benevolent sardār over our heads be removed."

On seeing his own condition which was becoming worse day by day, minute by minute, on account of the increase of the disease, and the decline of strength and energies, Nawwāb Wālājāh addressed Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur in the presence of Sayyid Āṣim Khān Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribī Ṣāhib as follows:

"Take profound interest in what I say and act up to it without fail.

"All that has a place in the domain of reality will cease to live, according to the verse 'Everything on the face of the earth will be annihilated'. It is necessary that every traveller from the invisible valley to this visible world should return to the everlasting world in accordance with the divine command, 'Return unto thy Lord'. For, all prophets, preceptors, saints, the learned, the virtuous, shaykhs, reformers, kings, and persons of high rank in all the seven iqlīms, amīrs, aliens, faqīrs, miskīns, sages, old and young never deviated from this inevitable course. It is necessary for us who tread on the path of firm faith promulgated by Muḥammad the chosen, the great leader in both worlds and the last of the messengers (peace be on him, his family and his companions) that in our last moments the glorification of Allāh and praise of the Prophet should be on our tongues and admonitions and exhortations of spiritual guides should be kept in our minds.

“It is necessary for you just now, in my last moments, that you should bring together by my side Ḥaẓrat Mawlānā Abdu’l-Alī Ṣāhib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribī Ṣāhib, and other holy persons who mind their duty to the Lord of the Universe, and who employ their tongues for the glorification of the Prophet; they would occupy themselves in reciting verses of the Qurān, narrating traditions of the Prophet and relating the miracles of Maḥbūb-Subḥānī and I could give my mind to thoughts on my Creator and His beloved messenger. Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribī Ṣāhib may be requested to read aloud as far as possible the sūra yāsīn in a pleasant voice, so that it may bring about my salvation and the remission of my sins. I had followed Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur on many occasions when he led the tarāwīḥ prayer in the holy month of Ramaẓān. It is necessary for him that after my death he should read the Qurān every day till fortieth day of mourning and offer this as a present on my behalf to the Prophet, the leader of the world, and Maḥbūb Subḥānī, the pure soul, so that its benefits may come to me.” Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur who was present then listened to these directions and was extremely pleased.”

The Nawwāb again addressed those present thus: “After my death, it would be best if Nawwāb ‘Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, my beloved son, could send my corpse to Baytullāh and bury it underneath the steps of the ka'ba. If by chance this is not possible you must suggest to Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, my beloved son, heir and successor, that he may send it to Nattharnagar, and inter it near the exalted tomb of Ḥaẓrat Ṭabl-i-Ālam Nattharwali Ṣāhib (peace be on him) for my Bēgam also is interred under the benign shade of that tomb. If this also be not possible at present, it may be buried for sometime under the roof of Ḥaẓrat Dastgīr Ṣāhib Sāwī (peace be on him) in Mylapore. May my dust return to the dust of which it was made."

After giving them instructions about the shrouding and furnishing for his funeral, he advised them on matters relating to the administration of government. He addressed Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur thus:

"O! My beloved son, O! my happy successor, listen attentively to the advice of this traveller to the everlasting kingdom and act up to it as long as the bridle of authority rests in your hand.

"First: to discover a thing for the first time and to bring it under your control is the most arduous of all tasks. It is equally so with a kingdom. Mīr Abjadī Ṣāhib, your teacher, has said that in his Anwarnāmā. You should have known clearly how the Supreme Ruler favoured this faqīr, the slave of Ḥaẓrat Maḥbūb-Subḥanī, with sovereignty over the kingdom of the Carnatic. Therefore when you succeed to my throne it is incumbent on you to attend to every work with wisdom and sagacity, prudence and foresight keeping an eye on the success of the undertaking, for it is said 'Far-sighted man is a wise man.' To draw in the well-wishers of your authority is to strengthen the pillars of the building of sovereignty; to understand correctly the worth of persons of rank is to ensure permanency of the foundation of the edifice of government. The minds of subjects should be kept happy and cheerful by means of justice and equity. For Shaykh Sa'dī says: 'Nōshirwān chose justice and his name is remembered now.' Good government is the result of kindness on the part of the ruler, and the happiness of subjects is ensured by justice, as the saying is 'The kingdom is maintained by benevolence and not by oppression', for, the Lord of the Universe is the real Judge and His prophets and messengers are His munṣifs and administrators of justice.

"It is necessary for my son that he should carry on correspondence with the English king and the authorities of the Company and cultivate friendship with them so that they may be pleased with him; not even a trifling error should be allowed to come in between. He should not countenance any deed which is not acceptable to them, for, this would give strength to his authority. He should pay into the treasury of the Fort at Madras the stipulated amount of qisṭ as done at present in accordance with the agreement without any excuse or dispute. He should not allow even an inch of land under his authority, to come into the possession of others except by way of jāgīrs.

"My beloved son! By the grace of Allāh! you are learned and wise, prudent and discreet; it looks as though I am teaching wisdom to Luqmān.¹ It is said, 'Every person knows how best he can meet the exigencies.'

Next day at about 10 o'clock in the morning, Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur went to enquire about the health of Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad Ālī Khān Bahādur, his elder brother. On seeing the condition of his brother who had reached the last moments of his life, he drew deep audible

(1) Luqmān is a person of eminence, known as Luqmān-al-Ḥakīm (Luqmān the sage). He is mentioned in the Qurān (sūra 31, verse 12) as one upon whom Allāh had bestowed wisdom.

Commentators of Qurān are not agreed upon his identity. Mawlānā Muḥammad Ālī says that Luqmān was an Ethiopian. — breath expressive of sadness, and shed tears of grief although he outwardly comforted and consoled his sick brother. Then the Nawwāb returned to his house.

Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur learnt the extremely serious condition of his father and came out weeping from Kalas-maḥall. He told secretly Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur to have the care of palaces, treasury, tōshak-khāna, kachahrī, offices, and other departments of the sarkār and instructed him thus : "I shall be in the house of my senior sister. Every minute you should send me information about the affairs in this place and also the state of health of the exalted Nawwāb ṣāhib."

He instructed Sālār Jang Bahādur thus : "You must inform the Nawwāb that the doctors entreat him not to remain in the zenana, but to lie down in the mardāna, for the women in the zenana will weep on seeing the extreme bodily suffering and that will bring forth more weariness and restlessness, which in his present condition will not be good enough, and increase the illness." In obedience to the command of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, Sālār Jang conveyed the views of doctors to Nawwāb Wālājāh Muḥammad 'Alī Khān Bahādur. Nawwāb Wālājāh in accordance with the advice of doctors gave up all arrangements for the zenana in his room; he also understood that his life was despaired of.

When the arrangements for the zenana were abandoned, the three daughters of the Nawwāb, and Karīmū'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba known as Hāẓrat Bēgam, the younger sister of Nawwāb Wālājāh, endeavoured to get permission from Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur to go and see the exalted Nawwāb Wālājāh. But Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur replied to them thus : "It is not the desire of Nawwāb Wālājāh to permit women to his apartments for such is the instruction of doctors. I am helpless. It is better you stay in your houses and pray for the recovery of the Nawwāb."

Section 1.

Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur ordered 'Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur and Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur as follows: "You brothers must go immediately to Kalas-maḥall and be present at its gate." He commanded Muḥammad Najīb Khān Bahādur Sālār Jang and Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān thus: "Be present before Nawwāb ṣāḥib, so that nothing may worry or annoy the patient."

Section 2.

In brief, when the sun set on the 28th of the month of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1210 A.H. [12th October 1795, A.D.] and darkness of the night of the 29th prevailed, Nawwāb ṣāḥib showed signs of great restlessness. At about 9 P.M. Nawwāb ṣāḥib understood that he was passing through the agonies of death, and addressed Sālār Jang and Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān as follows: "My condition seems to be very different now; it is necessary that you conduct to my presence Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribī ṣāḥib for the purpose of reading sūra yāsīn and invite quickly Mawlānā 'Abdu'l 'Alī Ṣāḥib and Shāh Quḍratul-lāh Ṣāḥib."

On hearing this shocking news, the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur immediately presented himself before his noble father, saw with his own eyes the condition of the Nawwāb, shed tears of grief, gathered together Mawlānā ṣāḥib and other elders and addressed them as follows:

"Please kindly be present near Nawwāb ṣāḥib, my father, and occupy yourselves with continual prayers to the Nourisher of the World, with glorification of the names and attributes of the Supreme Being and recitation of the miracles of Muḥammad the chosen (peace be on him) and of Ḥaẓrat Maḥbūb Subḥānī." He gave orders secretly to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur to attend to the management of the government. He addressed Sayyid 'Āṣim Khān Mubāriz Jang Bahādur as follows:

“The Nawwāb is in a precarious state of health. You must all be attentive to your work. If you think it is necessary that you should employ watchmen and chawkīdārs for keeping watch in different places, do it now after consulting with Qādir Nawāz Khān. At present I am in no mood to attend to anything. I do not think it is necessary that I should inform the Governor of Madras about the state of the Nawwāb’s health; for I am the eldest son and the heir apparent. After the fatīḥa on the third day, I can, on my own authority, succeed to the throne of my father. By the grace of God, I do not think that this communication to the Governor of Madras and the members of the Council will serve any purpose.”

Mubārīz Jang submitted boldly, “Your highness’ opinion is excellent. What can your devoted servants say on this? But your highness may give a hint of this to the Governor if you deem that this would do. Even if this is not done, we, who wish you well, are desirous to obey you.”

Nawwāb ‘Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur replied in great vexation of spirit, “Khān ṣāḥib! Where is the necessity for informing any one about the demise of my father?” He then turned to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur and said:

“I have already given strict orders to Mr. Bātlī in the Angrēzī-dāri’l-inṣhā that as soon as the good soul of Nawwāb ṣāḥib departs from life, he should write a ḥukm-nāma to Lord Hobart, Governor of Madras, (1794-1798) requesting him that he should arrange to fire seventy-five salutes proportional to the venerable age of Nawwāb ṣāḥib. As soon as the coffin is taken out, the salutes should be fired from the fort of Madras and in the same manner from all other forts in the kingdom. It strikes me that the communication to the Governor of Madras in regard to the condition of the Nawwāb’s health just now will not be useful. By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, on the day of my coronation a salute of guns from my bāgh expressing homage to me will become perceptible to the ears of the Governor. It is necessary, that you enjoin strictly on the men in the Angrēzī-dārūl-inshā not to write any letter conveying the serious illness or the death of Nawwāb šāhib to the Governor of Madras."

After these directions to them, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur went to the house of his senior sister and rested there for the night in his own room.

The whole night Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Muḥammad Alī Khān Bahādur suffered pangs of death.

Section 3.

On Tuesday morning, the 29th of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1210 A.H. [13th October, 1795 A.D.] at about 7 o'clock the good soul departed this life. 'Verily, we are for Allāh and to Allāh we return.'

The news of Nawwāb šāhib's death spread immediately and there arose sounds of lamentation and loud excited utterances of grief in the mardāna, zenana, and in all palaces, the houses of the three daughters of the Nawwāb, the big bāgh, lanes, bāzār, and houses in every part of the town. The violent sorrow and distress of mind caused by the death of Nawwāb šāhib seemed to reach as far as the heavens.

When things were in that condition Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and Riḡā Yār Khān, in accordance with previous orders of the exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh II, arranged to close all the doors of the bāgh and posted sentinels to guard every door, the treasury, tōshak-khāna, kachahrī, and the doors of other palaces wherever necessary and awaited further orders from the Nawwāb.

In the meanwhile, the exalted Nawwāb heard this destructive and dreadful news, came out of his sister's house staggeringly with a tear-stained face, got into a suksāwan that belonged to Ram Rao, the mutaṣaddī at the house of his senior sister, reached the big dīwān-khāna in the Humāyūn-maḥall and sat in the room of Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur. He called Mubāriz

Jang Bahādur and sent him in company with Mīr Ismāʿl Khān Bahādur to seal the treasury and the offices.

Section 4.

The Nawwāb chose Mawlānā ʿAbduʿl-ʿAlī Ṣāhib, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib, Ḥāfiẓ Ḥājī Maghribī Ṣāhib, ʿAbduʿl-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, ʿAbduʿl-Maʿbūd Khān Jamshīd Jang, Muḥammad Najīb Khān Bahādur Sālār Jang, Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān, Muḥammad Miftāḥ and others to attend to the details in regard to burial. Some experienced Abyssinians were given for their assistance. The Nawwāb invited his nephews and seated them by his side. He showed favour to Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur by asking him to send quickly a trooper to Mylapore with the following message to Nawwāb Shukōhuʿl-Mulk Naṣīruʿd-Dawla Bahādur. "The carriage of your highness' elder brother is ready to march to the eternal kingdom. May you be pleased to come and give your elder brother a send-off." Another trooper may be sent quickly to Sayfuʿl-Mulk Bahādur and Ḥusāmuʿl-Mulk Bahādur so that they may come immediately. Finally he gave orders to write a condolence letter to Naṣīruʿl-Mulk Bahādur in Nattharnagar.

In a little while Sayfuʿl-Mulk Bahādur, and Ḥusāmuʿl-Mulk Bahādur reached the palace. The Nawwāb seated Sayfuʿl-Mulk Bahādur in the niʿmat-khāna of the dīwān-khāna facing the sea, and Ḥusāmuʿl-Mulk Bahādur in the khalwat-khāna facing west, and addressed them as follows: "I seek your advice. I shall let you know later. Please take your seat here."

He sent for Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān through Jāwīd Khān, seated him by his side, and in despite of attempts to induce him to play with three or four children he wept for his father and said every minute hajū-lāl. When he wept out thus, others present also wept.

Mīr Ismāʿl Khān who was entitled to the style of Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, Taqī ʿAlī Khān Bahādur, Quṭbuʿd-

Dīn Khān Bahādūr, Alī Nawāz Khān Bahādūr, Raḥmān Alī Khān Bahādūr and Shujāʿat Alī Khān Bahādūr who were then present in his presence were asked to stay on, and to get Sayyid Muḥiyyu'd-Dīn, Sayyid Makhdūm the risāladār, Muḥammad Ḥusayn, and Ghulām Murtaẓā the commandant, to his presence with three armed men and be attentive to the orders of the sarkār.

Muḥammad Jāwīd Khān and other officers collected the keys of all offices from every one and placed them before the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāḥib put all the keys on the table in the room where he was seated and posted there an armed sentry and a commandant.

The Nawwāb had been, all this while, keeping himself informed of the preparations for the burial. In the meantime Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādūr came there. At about 11 o'clock Ḥājī Ḥāfiẓ Maghribī Ṣāḥib sent information to the Nawwāb that everything was made ready for the burial. Immediately after receiving this news Nawwāb ṣāḥib went there, placed the corpse in the coffin with the assistance of shaykhs and ulamā who stood according to the grade of dignity. Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādūr and Nawwāb ṣāḥib stood on either side of the coffin giving passionate expression to their grief. Then the coffin was carried to the big dīwān-khāna and it lay in state facing the door of ni'mat-khāna. The coffin was furnished with a ghilāf and shāmiyāna crowded with ornaments. Nawwāb ṣāḥib, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādūr, and Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādūr, came out from the dīwān-khāna of dārul-amāra in a style befitting their ranks, to say the prayer for the dead. They were followed by a crowd which was beyond one's reckoning, and comprised the nobility and the rank and fashion, besides the ulamā and shaykhs. Nawwāb ṣāḥib left the crowd to say the prayer for the dead on the way to the red-gate and himself returned to the dīwān-khāna. The salutes were not fired from the fort in accordance with instructions of the Nawwāb. The coffin was carried in great state and interred for a year under the vault of Ḥaẓrat Dastgīr Ṣāhib to the right of the sepulchre adjoining the wall¹.

At about 3 o'clock Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and all the men who accompanied the coffin returned and gathered together in Kalas-maḥall, offered fātiḥa and every person of rank proceeded to express his sympathy with Nawwāb ṣāhib. At that time Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur turned about and addressed Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur thus:

“My grief at the separation from my father is no less than Jacob's.

But he lost a son, and I a father.”

At about the time of afternoon-prayer, he invited his three sisters and Nawwāb Ra'īsu'n-nisā Bēgam, Nawwāb Zēbu'n-nisā Bēgam, and other wives of Nawwāb Wālājāh to Kalas-maḥall and consoled and comforted them. They wept and lamented. Nawwāb ṣāhib consoled them in all manner and sent them to their houses. Then the Nawwāb went out.

Section 5.

Nawwāb ṣāhib gave instructions to Qādir Nawāz Khān and Sālār Jang to make everything ready for the fātiḥa on the third day and for his coronation. Then he went to the house of his senior sister. As the fātiḥa on the night of the third day after the death of Nawwāb Wālājāh happened to fall on the night of the first of Rabī'ul-awwal, the place round about Nawwāb's grave was adorned with carpets and lights. The ḥaṣṣas, durūdīs, mawlūd-khwāns, and others were assembled together and they were occupied the whole night in reciting the Qurān, saying durūd and singing the praise of the Prophet. Qādir Nawāz

(1) The remains were later on carried to Trichinopoly and buried in the dargāh of Natthar Wall.

Khān, Mīr Ismā'īl Khān and Ḥāfiẓ Maghribī and Sālār Jang were in charge of the entire arrangement. Nawwāb ṣāhib went there at about 8 o'clock in the morning and took part with others in offering fātiḥa. Then he returned to the big bāgh, and arranged to distribute charities near the venerable tomb and in the big bāgh. Arrangements were kept up in this manner for all fātiḥas till the fortieth day of mourning.

Then for a period of six months Nawwāb ṣāhib offered fātiḥa on every Thursday in the following manner. He went out in great state by the sea-gate on every Thursday afternoon in a suksāwan accompanied by his nephews and other trustworthy officers. He was followed by bāndārs, ghōzanawāz, armed men, and Abyssinian horsemen. Generally Abdu'l-Ma'būd Khān Jamshīd Jang used to be present at the sepulchre. Nawwāb ṣāhib smiled at him indulgently and addressed him thus: "Khān ṣāhib! you are the intimate friend and companion of the Nawwāb here in this place. Please communicate to him my message and recommend me to him. Please also convey to me what he says in reply." Then Nawwāb ṣāhib participated in the fātiḥa and returned by the same road to his own bāgh, and bade farewell to all his companions.

I have written here whatever I knew. Allāh knows the rest.

FOURTH CHAPTER

The coronation of Nawwāb Umdatū'l-Umarā Bahādur; the correspondence between the officers of the company and the exalted Nawwāb; the conferring of titles on Muḥammad Alī Husayn Khān, and others; renting of the taluks of Nellore, Ongole, and Palnār to Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur; the exaltation of Ruknū'd Dīn Khān to the title of his father, and to the office of fawjdār over Muḥammadpūr; the marriage of Ra'īsū'l-Umarā Bahādur; the grant of jāgīrs, and other events in the glorious darbār.

Praise be to Allāh and His favours: On Friday, the 2nd of Rabī'uṭh-thānī in the year 1210 A.H. [16th October 1795 A.D.] the world-illumining sun shone brightly and shed radiance on the universe, when the ministers of the state and officers of government, in accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, furnished the dārū'l-amāra with carpets, lanterns, masnad and shāmiyāna. The exalted Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Umdatū'l-Umarā Bahādur, a person of light and leading, put on his full dress which comprised the following: Jahāngīrī-dastār of exquisite quality with a ṭurra of pearls, every string of which was of priceless value, a gown, a nīm-āstīn with embroidered border, and a shāh jahānī waist-band fitted up with an enamel rim, and a sword studded with pearls, and with an enamelled handle. Nawwāb šāhib arrayed himself up thus and came out of the big diwān-khāna at about 11 o'clock in the morning, when his hands rained gems, and his thanks giving to the Great Almighty had been the means of shedding perfume around the people. He caught hold of the hand of Maliku'l-Ulamā and took his seat on the Wālājāhī masnad.¹ Immediately congratulatory expressions were heard from all sides; hand over hand rose up with nadhīr. Every one was treated kindly to 'iṭr, pāndān, and rose-water. A round of cannons and muskets were fired. The noise of tambourine, pipe, nawbat and festive music from the bāgh rose up to the heavens. Of the nadhirs that were presented, the Nawwāb took out a tray full of gold and silver and emptied it first into the skirt of Mawlānā ṣāhib; then he presented other shaykhs with plates containing gifts. The Nawwāb gave orders that the remaining nadhr should be conveyed to the treasury.

Then he dismissed the assembly, and went to the big room facing west. This room, enclosed with tatties, was the residence of the sons-in-law of Nawwāb Wālājāh. The Nawwāb had arranged, before the coronation, to furnish it with white carpets, chairs and other things.

In the meanwhile news was carried to him that the son of Lord Hobart was present at the dīwān-khāna. As soon as he heard this news, he understood the purpose of the visit and told Mubārīz Jang Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and others who were present as follows:—"This son of Lord Hobart has come to inquire of me. By His grace, he will return only after an unhappy interview." He commanded Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur thus: "Go and bring him to my presence." Nawwāb ṣāhib and others were seated on chairs when the son of Lord Hobart presented himself, paid his obeisance, took his seat and submitted on behalf of his father as follows:

"It was a great surprise to me that your highness had not favoured me with the news of the demise of your exalted father. If I had that information, I should certainly have sent the army, of the Company wearing such garments as sign of mourning to accompany the coffin in a style befitting the late Nawwāb's state. I should have also ordered to fire a salute of guns from the fort and other places. Furthermore you had the coronation after the fātiḥa on the third day. My father says that all this is not appropriate to the occasion. He also says that Nawwāb Wālājāh was so kind and benevolent as to acknowledge that my father was his son. Therefore it is incumbent on your highness to inform me. I should have arranged to fire a salute of guns from the fort of Madras at the time of the coronation; I should also have been present at the darbār and congratulated your highness on this happy event."

The Nawwāb ṣāhib listened to the message of Lord Hobart and said in reply: "As I was feeling sorrow at the demise of my father, I could not send information. I wonder at your friendship, love, wisdom and learning. It is incumbent on you to express sympathy with me at the death of my father. Instead of this you state your grievance to me. I am the eldest son, the heir apparent, the successor, the king chosen by my father; and I ascended the throne of my father in accordance with the usual practice in the world. There was no necessity to inform that ṣāhib about this."

After giving this reply, he gave the son of Lord Hobart leave to depart, and addressed Qādir Nawāz Khān thus: "Make all arrangements for a state drive. I wish to go the Wālājāhī mosque to say the jum'a prayer." Everything was got ready immediately. Nawwāb ṣāhib rode a mahādōl and went to the mosque in great state. He was accompanied by Sayyid Āṣim Khān Mubārīz Jang and Sirāju'l-Mulk Abdu'l-Husayn Khān Bahādur. After finishing the jum'a prayer, he offered the thanksgiving prayer in two genuflexions for his coronation. Then he returned in state and alighted at the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his senior sister, and gave his companions leave to depart.

Section 1.

The Nawwāb's two sisters assembled together at the house of their senior sister, presented him with nadh'r, congratulated him on his accession to the Carnatic throne and attended to the customary festive proceedings. Karīmu'n-nisā Bēgam, designated as Ḥaẓrat Bēgam ṣāhibā alias Chōtī Bēgam, the aunt of the Nawwāb came to that palace in the afternoon and offered her congratulations. Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādūr who was absent at the time of the presentation of nadh̄r in the dārul-amāra approached the Nawwāb who was seated on a chair decorated with green makhmal in the palace of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam and offered his nadh̄r. Sarfarāz Ālī Khān Bahādūr also offered his nadh̄r then. The Nawwāb addressed him thus: "I entrust with you my nadh̄r to my paternal uncle; please present it to him." Sarfarāz Ālī Khān Bahādūr, in obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb took charge of the nadh̄r, went to Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd Dawla Bahādūr, his own father, presented it to him on behalf of Nawwāb 'Umdatul Umarā Bahādūr, and reported his return to the Nawwāb in about an hour. Nawwāb ṣāhib was then engaged discussing in private with Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr certain affairs of the government. Then Sarfarāz Ālī Khān Bahādūr was admitted to the Nawwāb's presence. He paid his obeisance, offered congratulations on behalf of Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Bahādūr and presented nadh̄r on his behalf. The exalted Nawwāb ṣāhib was overwhelmed with joy and inquired of him thus: "In what direction my noble uncle was sitting in the dīwān-khāna when he received the nadh̄r?" He replied, "Towards the south." Immediately Nawwāb 'Umdatul Umarā Bahādūr got up from his seat, stood southwards, and in great joy offered his thanks to his uncle. Then he said to Mubārīz Jang, "My revered uncle stands for my noble father. He has conferred distinction on me by sending nadh̄r on the occasion of my coronation. For various reasons I could not go in person and present nadh̄r to my revered uncle; therefore I sent it through Sarfarāz Ālī Khān Bahādūr. By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, I shall pay him a visit one of these days." Then he gave the Khān and Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr leave to depart and himself stayed in the palace of his senior sister.

Next morning Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur went out to the house of Ḥaṣrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba, his aunt, offered nadhṛ, and then returned.

On the following day, the son of Lord Hobart, presented himself in the big dīwān-khāna for the purpose of discussing various matters unpalatable to the Nawwāb. He requested on behalf of his father that certain taluks be made over to the Company in return for the qisṭ money due to it. The Nawwāb gave the reply thus: "The qisṭ will be paid in cash in accordance with the agreement. Any other idea on your part will be of no avail. By the grace of God, I shall not give even an inch of land. My father in his life-time possessed himself of the throne of the Carnatic through the favour and kindness of Lord Cornwallis Bahādur. I have succeeded to the throne of my father; I have in my possession the treaty signed by Lord Cornwallis."¹

(1) There were three treaties between Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali Wālājāh Bahādur and Lord Cornwallis. The first was in 1787. It stipulated that the Nawwāb should pay annually nine lakhs of pagodas in times of peace, besides twelve lakhs for his debts; in times of war, the contracting parties should each pay four-fifths of their revenues, and that in case of non-payment by the Nawwāb, he should assign certain districts to the Company as security.

The treaty concluded in 1790 laid down that the British should take direct management of the Carnatic into their hands while the war with Mysore lasted.

The treaty of 1792 stipulated that the Nawwāb should pay annually nine lakhs of pagodas to the Company; the Carnatic was to be garrisoned with British troops; the British should collect the tributes from pālayagars on behalf of the Nawwāb; the assignment for his debts was to be reduced, and the British should take over the entire management of the Carnatic in the event of war.

The subsidy fixed by the treaty of 1792 was regularly paid by the Nawwāb, but he had to contract heavy loans to meet his liabilities and hence he assigned the revenues of his country to liquidate them.

After 'Umdatul-Umara ascended the throne, Sir John Shore, the Governor-General, authorised Lord Hobart, the Governor of Madras, to propose to the Nawwāb the assignment of the entire revenue to the Company. Lord Hobart apprehended the influence of European usurers on the Nawwāb,

CH. 4—LORD HOBART'S SON INTERVIEWS THE NAWWĀB

The son of the Governor of Madras was reduced to a non-plus by this irrefutable reply, and rendered miserable. Then he took leave of the Nawwāb, returned to his father, and conveyed to him the reply he received from the Nawwāb. Then Lord Hobart communicated this news to Sir John Shore, the Governor-General in Bengal, and was devising to get possession of certain taluks in lieu of the qisṭ due to the Company. When Nawwāb ṣaḥib became aware of this he was always reflecting upon methods to defeat the object of the Governor. He addressed Sālār Jang, Mubāriz Jang, and Bahrām Jang as follows:

“By the grace of Allāh, I succeeded to the throne of my father. It is not even a week since my coronation day, and I am bothered by unnecessary anxiety. Allāh, exalted be He, is the Protector and the King of kings.”

The Nawwāb was grave and gloomy in the week that followed his coronation on account of his correspondence with the Governor of Madras.

and negotiated without Sir John Shore's consent, for the surrender of only one district. He addressed the Nawwāb “in terms at once offensive to his deceased father and menacing to himself by pressing upon him unseasonably the immediate payment of a debt due to the Company, and other claims real or disputable by threatening compulsory measures.”

Sir John Shore acquiesced in Lord Hobart's proposal, but condemned his conduct “as repugnant to the treaty of 1792, by which the Nawwāb's rights were guaranteed—as, in respect of some of the demands pressed on the Nawwāb, unjustifiable—and as, in fact, involving a breach of faith.” The Governor-General also asserted that “the magnitude of an advantage could not warrant the prosecution of it by improper means.”

Lord Hobart appealed to the Directors in justification of his conduct, and Sir John Shore wrote to Dundas, the President of the Board of Control, on 12th January, 1796, that the conduct of Lord Hobart was “most unjustifiable, violent and indefensible upon every principle.” The Governor-General also protested against the principle of forcing the Nawwāb into an acquiescence by indirect means of coercion that “would soon suggest to the country powers that convenience was the measure of our good faith.”

Finally the Directors resolved in October, 1797 to recall Lord Hobart.

Section 2.

On the tenth day after the coronation, the Nawwāb came out of his sister's house in a suksāwan at about 9 o'clock in the morning and drove to the dārul-amāra while he was followed by ghōza-nawāz and jarwāns. He sat on the ivory chair near the window on the upper storey of Kalas-maḥall.

After the ministers, officers, munshis and mutasaddis paid their obeisance, Nawwāb ṣāhib assigned to each individual his work. Mubārīz Jang Bahādur was appointed dīwān, Mr. Battley to be the head of the Angrēzī-dārul-inshā, and Rai Khūb Chand to be the mīr-munshī of Fārsī-dārul-inshā. Sālār Jang, Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur and others were then present in the darbār. Nawwāb invited also Muḥammad Ālī Ḥusayn, his own beloved son, Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur, and Ghulām Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, the two sons of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Muḥammad Ābdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur, Muḥammad Karīm Khān Bahādur, Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh Khān Bahādur, Ābdu'l-Karīm, Nawwāb's another son, Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān I'timādu'l-Mulk, Sarfarāz Khān Ashrafu'l-Mulk, Ābdu'l-Ḥamīd Khān I'tiṣāmu'l-Mulk, and others. Ābdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur were also present in the darbār. The Nawwāb issued darbārī orders and attended to the affairs of the Government. Then he turned to bestow titles.

First he wrote a royal order conferring the title Malikūl-Ulamā upon Mawlānā Ābdu'l-Ālī ṣāhib and sent it through Qādir Nawāz Khān.

Another royal order containing a list of titles to be conferred upon Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān Bahādur and others was also signed by the Nawwāb: the title Naṣīr Jang for Muḥammad Naṣīr Khān, Muẓaffar Jang for Ghulām Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, Jalādat Jang for Muḥammad Karīm Khān Bahādur, and I'tiṣām Jang for Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh Khān Bahādur. In addition to the titles, the manṣab of two thousand was conferred upon every one of these men. The Nawwāb asked Qādir Nawāz Khān to read aloud the order conferring titles upon these men and took nadhīr from them.

The Nawwāb gave Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur another list of titles which conferred dignities upon the following: Muḥammad 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur was given the title Sirājūl-Mulk Dhūl-faqrūd-Dawla Sardār Jang, the manṣab of seven thousand and invested with privilege to narbat and ghariyāl; Muḥammad 'Alī Ḥusayn Khān with the title Amīrul-Mulk Umdatud-dawla Zafar Jang, and the manṣab of seven thousand. They also presented nadhīr to the Nawwāb.

Another royal order with the signature of the Nawwāb conferred the following titles: The title Amīr Jang on 'Abdu'l-Qādir Khān Bahādur, Ṣamsām Jang on Ḥāfiẓ Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur and the manṣab of four thousand also was conferred upon each of them. The Nawwāb took nadhīr from them.

Ghulām 'Alī, the eldest son of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, was ennobled with the title Ghulām 'Alī Khān Bahādur Sayf Jang; Walīullāh, the youngest son of Ghulām 'Alī, with Ghulām Riṣā Khān Bahādur Husām Jang; 'Abdu'l-Karīm another son of the Nawwāb, with Khān Bahādur; Ghulām Ashraf Khān Bahādur with Ruknūd-Dawla Bahādur. Of the two brothers-in-law of the Nawwāb, one was honoured with the title Wizārat 'Alī Khān Bahādur, and another with Dāwūd 'Alī Khān Bahādur.

Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur was dignified with the title Bahrām Jang, the manṣab of two thousand and invested with privilege to wear nīm-āstīn, and tie a rumāl shāl; Mir Ismā'īl Khān with Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur; Abū Ṭālib Khān, Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān, Yāsīn Muḥammad Khān, Shujā'at 'Alī Khān, Dargāh Qulī Khān, Taqī 'Alī Khān, Quṭbu'd-Dīn Khān, and Raḥmān 'Alī Khān, with Bahādur. All these persons presented nadhīr to the Nawwāb.

Then the Nawwāb signed three orders which conferred the title Nawwāb on his three sisters and sent them through Sālār Jang Bahādur.

Amīru'l-Mulk Bahādur 'Alī Ḥusayn Khān, and Sirāju'l-Mulk Bahādur 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān, were invested with privilege to rīs, and tambour in kāṭs. The Nawwāb's other nephews and Amīr Jang Bahādur, Ṣamṣām Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur were invested with privilege to rīs only. The Nawwāb accepted nadhṛ from them and gave them all leave to depart.

Section 3.

Nawwāb ṣāḥib was always ruminating over the correspondence with the Governor of Madras. By the grace of Allāh, a ḥukm-nāma from Sir John Shore, Governor-General of Bengal, reached the Governor of Madras two months after the coronation of the Nawwāb. It read thus:

"Your proposal that certain taluks should be made over to the company in return for the qisṭ is not plausible. Please accept the payment of qisṭ in accordance with the practice observed during the days of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh I.

"The exalted Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II took the right step to ascend the throne after his father. Immediately after reading this ḥukm-nāma you must meet Nawwāb ṣāḥib and tender my congratulations to him on his accession to the throne and order to fire salutes from the fort of Madras and ships expressing joy on the event."

In obedience to the ḥukm-nāma, the Governor of Madras informed Nawwāb ṣāḥib of his intention to visit him and on the appointed day the Governor and the sardārs of his Council presented themselves in the big dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall and congratulated the Nawwāb on his accession to the throne. A salute of guns was also fired from the fort and ships. The Nawwāb also was very much delighted in receiving the Governor and his companions and gave orders that a salute of guns should be fired in his own bāgh expressing respect to the Governor. The Nawwāb treated the Governor and others to pān, 'iṭṭ and flowers and gave them leave to depart. Next day,

CH. 4—UMDATU'L-UMARA VISITS THE GOVERNOR

at 11 o'clock Nawwāb ṣāhib sat in a mahādōl and went in great state to the fort to pay a return visit. He was accompanied by his son, nephews, and the officers of the Government. The Nawwāb returned to his residence after meeting the Governor. A salute of guns was fired from the fort in honour of Nawwāb ṣāhib's visit.

Section 4.

Generally Nawwāb ṣāhib held his morning darbār in the dīwān-khāna of the dārūl-amāra, and the evening darbār in the dīwān-khāna of Sirāju'l-mulk Muḥammad 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur at the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba.

During the early part of his reign before the completion of the building of Fataḥ-chawkī, the Nawwāb had his residence at the palace of his senior sister in the green-chair room. Every day at about six in the morning he drove a chārat and went out for a walk till 7 o'clock. After breakfast he drove a chārat drawn by four horses and reached Bāgh-i-kuhna, the residence of the mother of Amīru'l-Mulk Muḥammad 'Alī Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur and made inquiries about her health. Thence he went to his alchemy house, and occupied himself with the alchemy work. He rested there for a while in the noon. Then in the afternoon he returned to his sister's house and had his dinner.

Section 5.

Nawwāb ṣāhib got hold of the keys of certain rooms used by Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur, from the officers who were charged with their care, and also the key of the library in charge of Jāwīd Khān. He removed from these rooms to his residence such things as he found useful and left the rest in their respective rooms. He locked the doors and kept the keys in his own box.

Section 6.

The Nawwāb always strove to get a letter from the English king confirming his own government and sent many letters to England in regard to that. To achieve his end, he employed shaykhs who had practised ability in incantation. He also engaged pious men to repeat daily prayers, and read the holy Qurān a number of times.

Section 7.

From his young days Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur did not like Mubāriz Jang Bahādur. But out of regard for Nawwāb Wālājāh he pretended to be very courteous to him. When he came to power, Mubāriz Jang Bahādur continued as dīwān to all appearance, but Nawwāb ṣāhib looked after all affairs taking work from whomsoever he chose. Mubāriz Jang Bahādur, who understood the pleasure of the Nawwāb, did not interfere in any matter. His visits also became infrequent. He used to be present in the morning assembly and pay his obeisance to the Nawwāb. If there was any indispensable duty he attended to it after permission from the Nawwāb.

Section 8.

Three months passed after the coronation; one day at the darbār the Nawwāb ratified the orders of the sarkār, and then arranged to grant lease of the taluks of Ongole and Palnaṛ to Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. Then the Nawwāb invited Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, entrusted him with rent-service and took nadhṛ from him. After some time he invited Ruknu'd-Dīn Khān and conferred on him the title Niẓāmu'd-Dīn Aḥmad Khān and also honoured him with the office of fawjdār of the ṣūba of Muḥammadpūr known as Arcot.

Section 9.

Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba who was busy making due preparation for the marriage festivities of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur, made everything ready by Jumādiu'th-thānī in the year 1210 A.H. She distributed tōras through Yāsīn Muḥammad Khān, and Mīr Mahdī Khān, and khilāt through

CH. 4—MARRIAGE FESTIVITIES OF RA'ISU'L-UMARĀ

Rāi Hanmant Rāi Bahādur and Ram Rao. The festivities were begun with the permission of the Nawwāb. Officers like Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and others were in charge of all arrangements. Every one from the highest to the lowest was presented with gifts; even the broom and groom were given each a share of khilats with embroidered work. Such distribution of presents was kept up till the month of Rajab. Teachers, atāliq, and others were each presented with embroidered robe, shawl, dushāla and vari-coloured clothes that befitted the observances of ceremonies like the ceremony of rang, sharbat, barī, barāt, and chawthī. All the first-rate courtesans, qawwāls, and mīrāthīs in the kingdom of the Carnatic who had come from different towns were also honoured with such presents. The dīwān-khāna of Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur behind the green-chair room in the house of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Begam ṣāhibā was converted into the mānja-khāna of the bridegroom. It was decorated; the walls were adorned with painting of rose flowers of golden hue and other colours which excited the envy of gardens in early spring. On the 13th of Rajab, the marriage ceremonies were begun. Every day at about 9 o'clock in the night the bridegroom was seated on a peacock throne, and led in a procession from the mānja-khāna with all paraphernalia, many lamps, and fire-works to witness the nautch which went on till 12 o'clock. Then flowers, and pān were distributed. After this the bridegroom was conducted back to the mānja-khāna in the same manner. Nawwāb ṣāhib honoured the majlis by his presence in the first two or three days. Afterwards he could not be present at the nautch party or at other marriage festivities in the palace of his elder sister because of the pain caused by the boil in his leg. On the 2nd of Shā'bān when the ceremony of sānchaq was performed, all the officers, ministers and servants and others clad themselves in vari-coloured robes and walked in procession from the big Wālajāhī bāgh to the house of the bridegroom in the new garden well-known by the name of the Garden of Oakes, along with 500 chaw ghayas for the ceremony of sanchaq; some of these ghayas were painted with gold and silver; some were adorned with paintings of azure colour. Thus the entire procession presented the appearance of a garden. It was a marvellous sight; no mortal eye had seen such a sight before or could ever see it in future.

The following is a description of the procession at night:

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba sought permission of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II to engage Bahrām Jang Bahādur to supervise the arrangements with regard to the procession at night. About five hundred lights were lit in a ladder-like arrangement; about five thousand torches were lighted and carried when the bridegroom started with all paraphernalia. Bahrām Jang arranged to repair the mahādōl and sent it on the barāt day to the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam that she might ride in it along with the bride on the occasion of jakva. Prior to this, when Karīmu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba known as Ḥaṣrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba had requested Nawwāb ṣāḥib that she might be permitted to ride in the mahādōl on the occasion of the sanchaq ceremony, Nawwāb ṣāḥib did not give any reply but kept quiet. The Nawwāb's silence greatly afflicted Ḥaṣrat Bēgam ṣāḥiba; she thought out a plan; she returned to her house and engaged immediately the services of a workman to get ready a mahādōl in a day and a night. She fitted it with curtains made of gold thread and of embroidery, and covered every side with red bānāt; gold kalsās were also suspended from the top, as found in palanquins of Mughal type. She rode in it in the afternoon of the barāt day, went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, and addressed her thus: "Your elder brother thought that I was contemptible and unfit to ride in a mahādōl, and did not permit me; he also did not reply when I sought permission to ride in a mahādōl. Well: Allāh, glory be to Him and Exalted be He, out of His grace, granted to me in a short while a new mahādōl which surpasses in beauty the mahādōl of the sarkār. I came here riding in it to accompany the barāt. Of course it befits your rank and dignity to ride in the mahādōl of the sarkār and accompany the barāt of your beloved son."

Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam and her other two sisters smiled indulgently and sent information of this secretly to their elder brother. Bahrām Jang also communicated this news to Nawwāb šāhib. The Nawwāb laughed at the news and sent the following oral message to his aunt at the palace of his sister through Muḥammad Ma'şūm and Muḥammad Rōshan.

"Nawwāb šāhib pays his respects and desires to convey the news thus: It is learnt that you have made a litter after the model of a mahādōl and had come by that to my sister's house intending to accompany the barāt of 'Abdu'l-Husayn. Congratulations on that. But I make bold to submit that riding in a mahādōl is not suited to your rank. If you still persist in doing so, I leave it to your pleasure; men would laugh at it."

Ḥaẓrat Bēgam šāhiba sent the following reply with her greetings: "It does not matter. This humble mahādōl is superior to the mahādōl of amīrs." Nawwāb šāhib listened to this reply of his aunt and kept quiet.

As Nawwāb šāhib was indisposed on account of the pain caused by the boil in the leg, he could not visit the house of his senior sister for three or four days or be present at the marriage festivities. He stayed at Nuşrat-maḥall. At about 9 o'clock in the night of the barāt day he invited to Fataḥ-chawkī Khwāja 'Āşim Khān Bahādur Mubāriz Jang, Maliku'l-'Ulamā Mawlana 'Abdu'l-Alī Šāhib, 'Alīmullāh Shāh, and Sayyid Nūrullāh for the purpose of tying sehra to the bridegroom. After the arrival of the bridegroom, the Nawwāb requested these men at about 12 o'clock in the night, being the auspicious hour, to fasten the sehra; then he embraced the bridegroom and gave him leave to go to the house of his mother and drink sharbat.

Then the bridegroom came out of his mother's house riding on horseback and started in a procession in great state. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam in accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, rode on the mahādōl of the sarkār, while the other two sisters followed her in their own litters. Ḥaẓrat Bēgam ṣāhibā went in front of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam riding in her own mahādōl. The nieces of the Nawwāb rode on three or four bahals fitted with canopied litters behind the vehicles of the ladies. Thus the bridegroom went in great state with many lights proceeding step by step towards Nuṣrat-maḥall to see the exalted Nawwāb Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur. The Nawwāb saw his aunt's vehicle, the new mahādōl, and addressed smilingly Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān Bahādur thus: "My exalted aunt is coming by a wonderful vehicle along with the procession. She may also come by the same sort of conveyance from the bāgh of the bride on the day of jalwa. All would see and laugh at it".

Next day the ceremony of jalwa was gone through and in the afternoon Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam brought the bride and bridegroom with great pomp to her house in the big bāgh. Every one addressed her with expressions of joy on this event. Then she went before Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur and expressed her gratitude to him.

In the course of marriage festivities of her son, Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam was displeased with the Nawwāb because the members of the frang community were not present for the marriage. The Nawwāb, who recovered from his illness after some days, invited his three sisters to Fataḥ-chawkī on the occasion of a show by a Chinese man who had come recently from China and exhibited marvellous feats. The Nawwāb succeeded in a manner to remove the displeasure of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam on that occasion. The Nawwāb invited the bridegroom Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur and the bride to Fataḥ-chawķī and on the occasion of the rūnumā'ī ceremony the Nawwāb gave a ḥarwāna granting jāgīr to the bride, conferred on her the title Nawwāb Bēgam ṣāḥiba and also presented her with an emerald seal-ring. The ring with the words Nawwāb Bēgam ṣāḥiba inscribed on it belonged to his own mother and was in possession of his sister.

Section 10.

Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur could not, after his coronation, visit Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur for some reason or other and present nadhṛ to him. But he sent it through his son. After some time on the 2nd of Shawwāl the Nawwāb rode a suksāwan in the afternoon and went to the house of Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur in Mylapore to wish him a happy and prosperous īd of Ramaṣān. He was accompanied by his nephews, while a large crowd made up of armed jawāns, orderlies, chōbdārs, ghōṣa-nawāz and others followed them. The Nawwāb reached Mylapore, paid his respects to Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and presented nadhṛ to him. Nawwāb ṣāḥib stayed there for about an hour and took leave of his uncle. Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur accompanied Nawwāb ṣāḥib as far as the staircase and bade farewell to him. Nawwāb ṣāḥib then visited the zenana, greeted the inmates with expressions of joy and returned to his own residence.

Next day Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur returned the visit. After meeting Nawwāb ṣāḥib he visited Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba in her house, and returned to his own residence. During his lifetime Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur visited Nuṣrat-maḥall and Fataḥ-chawķī two or three times, and the house of the Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam once or twice.

Section 11.

One day before the īd in the month of Dhu'l-ḥajj in the year 1210 A.H., Nawwāb ṣāḥib visited the dārul-amāra and called for the parwānas for jāgīrs granted by Nawwāb Wālājāh to Nawwāb Ra'īsu'n-nisā Bēgam and Zēbu'n-nisā Bēgam, to Sulṭānu'n-nisā Begam and her two sisters. He kept these parwānas, with him and issued new ones, under his own seal to confirm the jāgīr and manṣab and sent the grants through Sālār Jang Bahādur. Malikū'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, the second sister of Nawwāb ṣāḥib, did not accept, for some reason or other, the parwāna sent to her. She returned it with the following message: "May Allāh, exalted be He, keep you safe and sound. Your safety is as good as parwānas for jāgīrs."

PART II.

1211-1212 A.H. [1796—1797 A.D.]

FIRST CHAPTER.

An account of the building of Fataḥ-chawķī; the grant of tenures, titles and manṣabs to Amīrūl-Mulk Muḥammad Alī Husayn Khān Bahādur and Sirājūl-Mulk Abdiūl-Husayn Khān Bahādur and others.

One day Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II decided to construct a new building in the big garden for his own residence. He called Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and Hājī Hāfiẓ Maghribī ṣāhib and expressed himself thus: "I wish to demolish Fataḥ-chawķī from Bāgh-i-kulhna and put another building up in the bāgh where the Wālājāhī-dārul-amāra is situated." Then he directed Hājī Hāfiẓ Maghribī ṣāhib to collect together the next day masons, carpenters and delvers of the sarkār, and the order was carried out. Early in the morning of the following day, Nawwāb ṣāhib came out before breakfast from the palace of his senior sister, went on foot accompanied by Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, and Hājī Hāfiẓ Maghribī ṣāhib, with a view to select a suitable plot on which the new building Fataḥ-chawķī may be constructed. They went as far as the vine-arbour near the sweet-water pond, and selected a place with a large number of cocoanut trees, which was nearer to the palace of his senior sister.

The Nawwāb then told Bahrām Jang and others thus: "This plot is more suitable for the construction of the edifice Fataḥ-chawķī." The Bahādur replied: "Your highness' decision is excellent, but a large number of cocoanut trees have to be cut down. It would be preferable if the plot behind the sweet-water pond is chosen, for it is empty of trees and also nearer to Kalas-maḥall. But the decision rests with your highness. Whatever place is chosen, may Allāh exalted be He, it will be suitable."

The Nawwāb said, "My exalted father arranged to cut down many cocoanut trees before he began the construction of Kalas-maḥall." Then he appointed Sayyid Ibrāhīm the risāladār, and other men directing them to get necessary materials from Bāgh-i-kuhna for the construction of Fataḥ-chawkī. He explained to the masons and others the plan of the new building with a compound wall. When the actual work of construction began, two or three tents were pitched at the place, and every day Nawwāb šāhib went there in the afternoon and guided the workmen with fresh ideas as they struck him. During the period of the construction of this new building his visits to the alchemy house became few and far between; once a week he visited Bāgh-i-kuhna after breakfast and engaged himself in the alchemy work. After the new building Fataḥ-chawkī was completed in a few months, the Nawwāb took up his residence there with great joy and happiness. He got ready on the ṣaḥn of the new premises, a tile-roofed building for the alchemy work and other houses for different works, besides some with tiled roofs for the kachahrī and jilaw-khāna. One more building covered with tiles was got ready behind Fataḥ-chawkī for the residence of the mother of Amīrū'l-Mulk Muḥammad Alī Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. As Fataḥ-chawkī was not spacious, the Nawwāb got ready, in a short while, a building of two floors, called Nuṣrat-maḥall, for his own dārūl-amāra. This building was contiguous to Fataḥ-chawkī and bordered on the portion of the palace of his senior sister occupied by Ḥāfiẓ Maghribī sāhib.

Section 1.

After Fataḥ-chawkī and Nuṣrat-maḥall were furnished, Nawwāb šāhib made arrangements to screen one half of the Wālājāhī bāgh for the use of the zenana, and invited his three sisters and their family for a party in the new buildings. The Nawwāb had the afternoon dinner with his sisters and distributed presents in the zenana. He treated his sisters kindly and bestowed upon them gifts. After spending a pleasant day the sisters took leave of the Nawwāb in the evening.

Section 2.

Daily routine of the Nawwāb in Fataḥ-chawkī

Nawwāb ṣāhib got up from his bed early in the morning. After attending to the routine duties he rode on a chārat followed by a trooper and a jama'dār; he went as far as Rōshan-bāgh and at about 7 o'clock returned to Fataḥ-chawkī. Till 8 o'clock he sat at the table enjoying his breakfast. Then he took his seat in the outer hall opposite to the gate of Fataḥ-chawkī, where ministers, officers, ulamās, and others were present, busied himself till 11 o'clock in listening to petitions and representations and issuing orders. After dissolving the assembly, he rested for a while in Fataḥ-chawkī. He woke up, worked for a while in the alchemy house and then held the darbār at Kalas-maḥall. He broke up the assembly in the afternoon and went to the house of his senior sister for dinner. Then he returned to Fataḥ-chawkī by suksāwan and sat in the outer hall facing west, on a couch fitted with makhmal, and checked the accounts rendered by Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm, for the expenditure of the daily allowance of one thousand rupees. This work kept him busy till 6 o'clock. Then he rode a suksāwan followed by ghōṣa-nawās and went to the house of his senior sister. He chatted with his sisters or sometimes played a game of chawsar till 8 o'clock and after the gun-shot he returned to Fataḥ-chawkī, where he busied himself as usual in writing or reading matters important to him, composing verses or reading poetical works. At about 12 o'clock he retired to bed in the room on the second floor of Fataḥ-chawkī.

Section 3.

The Nawwāb held the darbār one day on the second floor of Kalas-maḥall and sat on an ivory couch fitted with makhmal. He summoned Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, and invited Amīrū'l-Mulk Muḥammad Ālī Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur, and Sirāju'l-Mulk 'Abdu'l-Ḥusayn Khān Bahādur. The Nawwāb conferred on Amīrū'l-Mulk Bahādur the title Nawwāb Tājul-Umarā Umdatū'l-Mamālik Amīrū'l-Mulk with the privilege to the music of nawbat, and to wear jawāhirāt; and appointed him to be the khānsāmān and the bakhshī. Rīzā Nawāz Khān was chosen as the nā'ib of Amīrū'l-Mulk to look after the affairs pertaining to the office of the bakhshī. Sirāju'l-Mulk Bahādur was dignified with the title Nawwāb Ra'īsū'l-Umarā Sardārū'l-Mamālik Sirāju'l-Mulk with the privilege to wear jawāhirāt, and was appointed to be the bakhshī of the office of khitābāt. He was also permitted to maintain a risāla comprising five hundred armed men. Shujā'at Ālī Khān Bahādur was chosen as his nā'ib. The Nawwāb got from the royal treasury two thousand rupees and presented Amīrū'l-Mulk Bahādur and Sirāju'l-Mulk Bahādur each with one thousand for nadhr and other purposes. Each of these Bahādurs presented twenty-one muhr as nadhr to the Nawwāb who sent them in great state to the houses of his sisters to offer them nadhr.

Next day the Nawwāb conferred titles on his other nephews. The title I'tiṣādū'd-Dawla was bestowed upon Naṣīr Jang Bahādur; Majdū'd-Dawla Bahādur on Muẓaffar Jang; Sāhibū'd-Dawla on Jalādat Jang Bahādur; Nāṣirū'd-Dawla on I'tiṣām Jang Bahādur, and each one of them was honoured with the manṣab of 4,000. Mr. Barret was honoured with the title Major, Rai Khūb Chand with the titles Bahādur and Rāi Rāyān, and Hanmant Rai with Rāi Bahādur. Some mutaṣaddīs and officers were favoured with the titles Khān, Bahādur and Rāi.

SECOND CHAPTER.

An account of the letter that arrived from the English king confirming the title to the succession of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur along with a portrait, a sword, and a medallion of the English prince; the Nawwāb appoints Mr. Barret to be the dīwān, confers on him the title Colonel, and presents pāndān to him; the death of the wife of Sayful-Mulk Bahādur, and the affair of Ja'far Alī.

By the grace of Allāh, when the letter from the English king reached the Governor in Council at Madras, Lord Hobart Bahādur sent a note to Nawwāb ṣāhib on the 19th of Jumādiu'th-thānī, 1211 A.H. [19th December, 1796] informing him of the arrival of a letter and presents from England. Immediately after learning the news, the Nawwāb prostrated joyfully as a token of submission and thanksgiving to Allāh. Then he communicated this happy news to his sisters. He invited Sālār Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur and told them that he was rejoiced to hear the news of the arrival of the letter and presents from England and expressed thus: "By the grace of the eternal Lord, a letter has arrived from 'the Prince of Wales' (English king?)¹ my kind friend and affectionate brother. I wish to take delivery of it on the auspicious Friday, the 20th of this month, at about ten in the morning at the Wālājāhī dārul-amāra". Then he ordered a note to be written to Lord Hobart about that.

He gave orders to Sālār Jang and other officers that the dīwan-khāna of the dārul-amāra should be furnished on

(1) King George III, was active and steady in the year 1796, and his eldest son was not acting then as regent. His eldest son, the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV, was regent during the insanity of his father in 1788 when he recovered before the regency bill was passed, and from 1811 till the death of George III in 1820.

The Prince of Wales always kept up a rival Court with great pomp at Carlton House.

Thursday with carpets, bānāt, masnad, canopy, couch, and chairs taken from all the offices to provide accommodation for all the frang sardārs who might come to deliver the letter, and that arrangements should be made to distribute pān, flowers, ‘itr and other things suggestive of the joyful occasion. The mīr-munshī of the Fārsī-dārūl-inshā was instructed to write letters to all the members of the royal family, the nobles and officers inviting them to put on rich dress and be present in the dārūl-amāra at the appointed time.

Then he directed Bahrām Jang Bahādūr to arrange to get together early in the morning all the paraphernalia for a state drive, to put a silken chair in the royal howdah and send these at 8 o'clock to the residence of the Governor so that the letter of the English king might be brought in that howdah to the dārūl-amāra; to fire a salute of twenty-one guns on the arrival of the letter to the bāgh, a salute of twenty-one guns after reading the letter and a salute of nineteen guns at the time of the Governor's arrival to and departure from the bāgh. Bahrām Jang Bahādūr carried out all these instructions.

On the morning of the 23rd, when the sun tore the veil of darkness and shed light on the earth and sky, Nawwāb ṣāhib put on rich robes, decked himself with jewels, glittering arms, and a tassel of priceless pearls on his turban. At about 9 o'clock in the morning, he drove from Fataḥ-chawkī to the dīwān-khāna of the dārūl-amāra which was thronged with all officers, nobles, munshīs, mutaṣaddīs, servants and others; he arranged a relay of troopers between his big bāgh and the bagh of the Governor to bring information about the party which carried the letter. In this manner the Nawwāb waited for the arrival of the letter. In the meanwhile news came about the departure of the party carrying the letter from the garden of the Governor and in a short while the letter, the portrait of the 'prince' and presents which were carried on the howdah, entered the bāgh in great state, accompanied by members of the council and others. Immediately a salute of guns was fired from the bāgh and the fort. The howdah, where the son of Lord Hobart sat holding the letter, made a halt in front of the dīwān-khāna, when Nawwāb ṣāhib went towards it. Lord Hobart and other sardārs who came by chārats, alighted from their carriages outside the door of the dīwān-khāna, and advanced to the howdah. Lord Hobart took the letter from his son, went into the dīwān-khāna and delivered it to Mr. Fāknar¹ who was by the side of the masnad. Then he opened the box and took out the medallion and the sword. He decorated the Nawwāb's neck with the medallion and added lustre to Nawwāb's hand by placing on it the sword. Then the order was given to read aloud the letter. Mr. Fāknar stood on the chawkī furnished with makhmal and read out the letter. Then the Governor handed over to the Nawwāb the Persian version of the letter. The Nawwāb gave that to Rāi Khūb Chand Bahādur the mīr-munshī, and ordered him to read it. Rāi Khūb Chand Bahādur stood upon the same chawkī, read it eloquently and then resumed his seat. Immediately after this a salute of guns also sounded in the bāgh, in the army quarters of the sarkār and the company. Lord Hobart and other sardārs congratulated the Nawwāb on this happy event. Then the Governor brought the box that contained the portrait of the Prince, and showed it to him. Immediately the Nawwāb ordered his men to suspend it on the eastern wall of the dīwān-khāna. He very much commended the merits of the 'prince'; he touched the portrait with his hand and said "Thanks to Allāh, by the kindness of this affectionate brother the letter confirming my title to the throne reached me soon". Then Nawwāb ṣāhib sat upon the masnad and received nadhr. After the distribution of flower, īṭr, and pān, all the frang surdārs and others took leave of the Nawwāb. Then he rode the mahādōl in great state accompanied by Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur and Tājul-

(1) He may be identified with Major Fitzgerald who was the confidential clerk of the Nawwāb.

Umarā Bahādur and visited the Wālājāhī mosque to say the jumʿa prayer. After finishing the prayer, he went to the palace of his senior sister. He received nadhṛ from all his three sisters and others, and distributed large presents in her palace. In the afternoon Nawwāb Shukōhʿl-Mulk Bahādur visited the Nawwāb and felicitated him on the happy news. Ḥazrat Bēgam šāhibā also shed lustre on the company by her presence and prayed for long life and prosperity of the Nawwāb. Sayfʿl-Mulk Bahādur also presented his nadhṛ with expressions of joy on the occasion.

Section 1.

The date prescribed for the payment of the qisṭ to the company drew near and there were only four or five days left. Nawwāb šāhib how-much-so ever tried to find money, but it was of no avail. He sent information to Mubārīz Jang Bahādur thus: "The qisṭ has to be paid to the company in four or five days' time. I could not do anything. If you could manage it by any means, I will feel great joy." Mubārīz Jang appeared before the Nawwāb and submitted as follows: "I tried all means. As there are outstanding debts from the days of Nawwāb Muḥammad ʿAlī Wālājāh, the bankers desire fresh securities and they will not lend money without them." On hearing this news, Nawwāb šāhib became more pensive, went to the house of his senior sister and told her that the time for the payment of the qisṭ to the company was drawing near and Mubārīz Jang Bahādur could not manage it. But his sister also feigned ignorance. In the meanwhile Mr. Barrett, who had taken the Chinese gharīyāl for repairs, brought it and communicated the news of his arrival to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb šāhib came out, received the gharīyāl and felt very happy. But Mr. Barrett noticed signs of anxiety and deep thought in the face of Nawwāb šāhib, and made bold to enquire of him about it. The Nawwāb replied:

“My friend! what shall I say? I am in a fix. How to express myself? By the grace of the eternal Lord, everything turned up as I expected; but some mischief-makers look out for an opportunity to bring shame upon me in my relationship with the Company. It happens thus: the time prescribed for the payment of the qist to the company is fast approaching. If it is not paid in time, it will bring discredit upon me. Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr has spoken clearly on the subject; my sister also is apathetic. I am very much agitated and worried about this, for I shall appear a breaker of promise in the eyes of the government, and misunderstanding will arise between the Company and myself. Certainly this should not be. Many matters in which I have interest, are on the tapis of the English king and the Company, and non-payment of the qist will be to the prejudice of my rights.”

Mr. Barrett submitted: “It is a great wonder that Mubārīz Jang Bahādūr, in spite of his high position, cannot find the means to provide with the money needed. But the Nawwāb has simply to give an order to anybody that it should be done and the power derived from his majestic order will remove a thousand worries in the twinkling of an eye.”

Nawwāb ṣāḥib was very much pleased by this reply and said, “You are wise, sagacious, and learned. I am sure you can manage this work.” Mr. Barrett replied, “I am your old loyal servant. If the order is given, the qist money will be paid a day before the appointed date, and the receipt of payment from the company’s treasury will be brought to you.” Nawwāb ṣāḥib was very much pleased to hear that assurance, and felt very happy. Then he said, “Mr. Barrett, if you can manage this affair it will give me great joy, while it will make my enemies look black. By the grace of Allāh you will be appointed dīwān”.

Then Mr. Barrett paid obeisance and took leave of the Nawwāb. Mr. Barrett succeeded in his endeavour to get an English banker as surety for the payment of the qist in the treasury of the Company, secured the treasury receipt for the amount paid and brought it to the Nawwāb. As soon as the Nawwāb saw the receipt, he was delighted and rejoiced at it. He embraced him, applauded and praised him. Then said the Nawwāb, "You alone could do it, and you are the man. From to-day you are the representative of my authority". Mr. Barrett paid obeisance and returned home.

The Nawwāb ṣāhib commended the merits of Mr. Barrett in the darbār, in the house of his senior sister and in other places thus: "None of my officers can make arrangements for the payment of the qisṭ to the Company. But one Chaiṭa-pōsh made arrangements for it, brought to me the treasury receipt for the payment of the qisṭ to the Company. In return for this service I made him the agent of my kingdom, and in future this Chaiṭakār shall look after the affairs of my government.

Section 2.

Next day at about 10 o'clock in the morning, Nawwāb ṣāhib visited Humāyūn-maḥall and ordered Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur that he should immediately send for Mr. Barrett. In obedience to the order the Bahādur presented Mr. Barrett to him. Then the Nawwāb advised Mr. Barrett, as required by convention, conferred on him the title Colonel Barrett Bahādur and granted him a jāgīr, a pāndān in token of the grant, appointed him to be the dīwān and presented him with a dignified khilat and a white dushālā of great value. A ḥukm-nāma signed by the Nawwāb was granted to Mr. Barrett confirming his appointment. Colonel Barrett, who was thus honoured with the manṣab and appointment, submitted 125 ashrafī as nadhr.

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Colonel Barrett had his office in the big dīwān-khāna. His room was opposite to the gate of Kalas-maḥall. He appointed Rāi Reddi Rao and

(1) Rāi Reddi Rao served as the Sarishṭadār of the Nawwāb. He was implicated in a charge of having forged the Carnatic loan bonds in collusion

Rāi Ānand Rao¹ as pēshkārs and enjoined on Rāi Khūb Chand the mīr-munshī, that he should be present by his side. He furnished his own room with an almirah, some chairs and a table with drawers and locks—all taken from the kārkhāna of the sarkār. He presented himself at the morning darbār from 10 o'clock to 12 o'clock, and spent the rest of the day in the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall. After the completion of Fataḥ-chawkī, Colonel Barrett presented himself at the morning darbār in the dārūl-amāra of the chawkī; after meeting the Nawwāb, he sat in the vestibule of Fataḥ-chawkī and attended to the affairs of the government. When the Nawwāb held the evening darbār from 6 o'clock to 8 o'clock, Colonel Barrett waited for him from sunset at the palace of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam, in the green-chair room of the Nawwāb. At about 7 o'clock in the evening, the Nawwāb left Fataḥ-chawkī and went as usual to his room in the palace of his sister. He took his seat on the green chair and discussed with Colonel Barrett the affairs of the government for about an hour. Then the Nawwāb entered the palace of his sister. Colonel Barrett ordered the munshīs and others attached to the darbār to close their kachahrī in the dīwān-khāna of Ra'isu'l-Umaīā at 8 P.M. and himself returned home. All the munshīs, mutaṣaddīs, and others were obedient to the Colonel and were attentive to their duties. Nawwāb ṣāhib did not consult anyone except Colonel Barrett on matters of government.

One day the Nawwāb expressed to Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur thus: "The Creator has bestowed favour on my administration, by reason of which my authority is maintained and peace of mind is secured. Colonel Barrett Bahādur is a brilliant man, sagacious and ingenious; he cleverly contrived to pay the qisṭ to the

with Mr. Battley, the English secretary to the Nawwāb and was committed to trial before the Supreme Court (1807—8 A.D.)

(1) Rāi Ānand Rao was the brother of Rāi Reddi Rao.

Company and paid the stipulated amount into the treasury of the Company in a short while." Bahrām Jang Bahādur submitted to the Nawwāb, "Your highness' opinion is excellent."

The exalted Amīru'l-Hind Wālājāh Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur out of nobleness of mind conferred distinction on his officers, servants and others by granting them good situations, according to the rank and status of each person. He appointed suitable men to be fawjdārs and āmils in the taluks of the Carnatic. Colonel Barrett Bahādur also was honoured with the grant of jāgīrs and titles.

Section 3.

On the occasion of the marriage of Majdu'd-Dawla Bahādur, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur visited one day the palace of Malikun-nisā Bēgam šāḥiba and endeavoured to remove the misunderstanding that had come in between them for some reason or other. She had declined, on account of the misunderstanding, to accept the parwāna for jāgīr granted by the Nawwāb. He advised and comforted her; he showed her great kindness by giving her a parwāna for jāgīr and presenting her with ten thousand rupees for the expenses of the marriage and two thousand rupees to humour her. He appointed Sālār Jang Bahādur to make everything ready for the marriage. Seeing the kindness and favour of her brother, Malikun-nisā Bēgam cleaned the sorrow-stricken mind with the wave of her sisterly affection. She accepted the parwāna and the cash. She spoke lovingly to her brother for some time and sent him away.

Muḥammadī Bēgam, the daughter of Malikun-nisā Bēgam, was married to the writer of this chronicle three years before the demise of Nawwāb Muḥammad Āli Wālājāh Bahādur. The marriage was celebrated in a grand style at a cost of forty-thousand rupees, under the supervision of Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. On the day of the marriage ceremony Nawwāb

CH. 2—MARRIAGE OF MAJDU'D-DAWLĀ BAHĀDUR

Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh rebuked Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur for his extravagance. But Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur intervened in this affair and procured pardon for Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur who was then enabled to go with the bridegroom during the shab gasht.

The marriage of Majdu'd-Dawla Bahādur with the daughter of Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur¹ was settled. Sālār Jang and others made everything ready for the marriage, in accordance with the plan of Nawwāb šāhib. After obtaining the permission of the Nawwāb, Malik'u'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba took steps to furnish and decorate the mānja-khāna through Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur in his own dīvān-khāna. Every plan was carried into effect. On the day of shab gasht Nawwāb šāhib accompanied by his nobles paid a visit to the house of the bride, remained there for the ceremony of jakwa and bestowed honour on the party.

Section 4.

Badru'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba, the daughter of Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Bahādur, and the wife of Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur was taken ill when she heard the news that Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla Ghulām Riḏā Khān, her youngest son, went away to Nattharnagar to see his wife without informing his parents. She was shocked at this news and in a period of one week she passed away on the 14th of Sha'bān in the year 1211 A.H. Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur paid two thousand rupees for the funeral expenses. The coffin was sent to Nattharnagar with great honours, in accordance with the wishes of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur. Nawwāb šāhib expressed sympathy with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and told him as follows: "Do not give way to grief. I shall send for Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla from Nattharnagar." After he had consoled Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, the Nawwāb returned home with his sisters and others.

(1) He was one of the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh.

He gave orders at the Fārsī-dārūl-inshā that an 'ināyat-nāma should be sent by dāk to Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur at Nattharnagar with the following contents: "Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, your son-in-law, ran away from here to see his wife without informing his parents. He has gone over to your place. He must be sent back to Madras immediately after the fātiḥa for his mother on the third day."

When this 'ināyat-nāma reached Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk, he sent Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla to Madras soon after the fātiḥa on the third day was over.

Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla reached Madras in a short time, took up his residence at Rōshan-bāgh and conveyed the news of his arrival to Nawwāb ṣāhib. The Nawwāb rejoiced at the news and communicated it to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur through a trooper. Then he took a pencil and wrote in his own hand the following note to the author of this book.

"To

"Ṣāhibu'd-Dawla Karīm Miyān, most precious son! May he enjoy long life and prosperity!

"By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, the pleasant youth, youngest son of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, has come from Nattharnagar as desired by me. He is residing at Rōshan-bāgh. I intend to send you tomorrow to bid him welcome. It behoves you to get the permission of your mother and junior aunt and present yourself at Fataḥ-chawkī. Allāh is with us all.

"Ghulām Ḥusayn 'Umdatul-Umarā Amīru'l-Hind Wālā-jāh."

Nawwāb ṣāhib entrusted this letter to Sayyid Ibrāhīm, and directed him thus:—"Deliver this letter to Ṣāhibu'd-Dawla. Inform my second sister on my behalf that the youngest son of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur has come from Nattharnagar and is residing at Rōshan-bāgh. I wish to send her son-in-law, who is younger in age, to bid him welcome; she should also give him permission to go, and, before he goes, she should ask him to present himself before me." The risāladār delivered the letter to me, the indigent person, and communicated the oral message to the Nawwāb's sister. The noble mother of this author learnt the contents of the Nawwāb's letter and asked me to take the permission of my aunt and go.

Nawwāb Malikū'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba sent the following oral reply to Nawwāb šāhib:

"My dear brother,

"I send my greetings to you. Your idea is excellent. We have the greatest respect for it. But Ḥusāmūd-Dawla takes pride in being the grandson of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur. If some one of adequate rank and manṣab is chosen, it will conduce to his happiness. Although Šāhibūd-Dawla, the prosperous son, is not in the first degree, yet he has also the pride of place. He is your sister's son, and also takes pride in being your slave. You may do as you please. Whomsoever you may choose, it will confer dignity upon him."

The risāladār went before the Nawwāb and conveyed the message of his sister. The Nawwāb wrote on a piece of paper the following verse and sent it with a message to the house of his sister at about 9 o'clock in the night.

"Those who pride themselves on ancestry

Are verily the dogs that are contented with bones."

The following message of the Nawwāb was conveyed to his sister by the risāladār:

"By the grace of Allāh, I have decided to send to your palace a suksāwan carved with the design of a lion's head, two armed pahras, two troopers, six bāndārs, besides ghōza-nawāz, and six orderlies for the transport of your son-in-law. Please send him quickly to that place, so that he may escort Ḥusāmūd-Dawla from Rōshan-bāgh to our presence at Nuṣrat-maḥall in Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ.

Malikū'n-nisā Bēgam listened to the communication of Nawwāb ṣāhib and sent the following message with her greetings and salutations.

“Ṣāhibud-Dawla, the prosperous son, will faithfully carry out the orders of the Nawwāb.”

Next morning at about 7 o'clock this obedient servant went to Rōshan-bāgh in great state, took Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla in his company and presented him to the Nawwāb at Nuṣrat-maḥall in Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ. The Nawwāb rebuked Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla and sent him along with Bahrām Jang to the house of Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur. Bahrām Jang Bahādur was instructed that he should tie Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla's hands together with a rumāl before he introduced him to his father, and let him lie at the feet of his parent while Bahrām Jang should say on behalf of the Nawwāb thus: “I have taken to task this guilty person. Now I am sending him to you. Allāh is the real Forgiver; He forgives all sinners. I shall be happy if you can pardon this offender.” Bahrām Jang carried out the instructions. Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur also forgave his son for his offence.

Section 5.

On Wednesday, the 2nd of Shā'bān, Nawwāb ṣāhib came out of Fataḥ-chawkī to have his customary drive. The chawkīdārs paid their obeisance. Suddenly Ja'far Ālī, one of the chawkīdārs, drew his sword, came nearer to the Nawwāb in the twinkling of an eye, caught hold of the Nawwāb's skirt and took aim at him. But Muḥammad Ibrāhīm, the jama'dār, hastened to him and removed the sword out of the hand of Ja'far Ālī. In the course of this act, Muḥammad Ibrāhīm was injured in his hand. In the meanwhile, other orderlies also came, tore off the portion of the Nawwāb's garment that was in the hand of Ja'far Ālī, led the Nawwāb inside Fataḥ-chawkī, and closed its doors. Then Ja'far Ālī was taken into custody. This news spread everywhere in the town.

CH. 2—JA'FAR ALI ATTEMPTS THE LIFE OF THE NAWWAB

Nawwāb ṣāhib honoured Muḥammad Ibrāhīm by appointing him to be a ṣūbadār. Orders were given that all the doors of the bāgh should be closed, and neither the guard nor any other person be allowed to get into the bāgh. This order remained in force for two or three days. A large number of relatives, officers and others stayed for about a week or ten days at Fataḥ-chawkī in the presence of the Nawwāb. After some days Nawwāb ṣāhib summoned Ja'far 'Alī and made enquiries about his conduct. Bahrām Jang was appointed to enquire into the case. Bahrām Jang and Taqī 'Alī Khān called Ja'far 'Alī and told him thus: "If you give out the true facts, it will be better for you; else you will suffer severe imprisonment."

Ja'far 'Alī submitted: "Whether you believe me or not, I shall submit the facts as they are:

"Ashraf 'Alī, on behalf of 'Alī Ḥusayn Khān reported that if the exalted Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur comes to the throne, every one of the sayyids will be appointed to good situations and we can lead comfortable lives. Under this regime, we suffer extreme poverty and death is better than starvation. Muḥibb 'Alī and Muḥammad 'Alī were also present at that time. This was the motive that induced this slave to act. I came with the idea that death is better than starvation. This slave who has not the strength to endure hunger may be punished with death. The intention of this slave was not to kill the Nawwāb."

Bahrām Jang stated full particulars about Ja'far 'Alī to Nawwāb ṣāhib who flew into a rage and said:

"If Sayfu'l-Mulk has the desire to come to the throne after me, it is a vain hope. I intend my son for the throne; Sayfu'l-Mulk intends that the throne is for him; my senior sister has in mind that her son is meant for the throne after me; and the frangs are waiting for their opportunity.¹ But it shall be as the supreme Ruler wills."

Then he directed Bahrām Jang Bahādur that Ja'far Ālī, Muḥibb Ālī, Ashraf Ālī and Muḥammad Ghawth, should be bound in chains and led to Chandragiri; that one jama'dār, and two armed guards, should be sent along with one or two miyāna to take Ālī Husayn Khān as prisoner, put him in the miyāna, and lead him captive beyond the boundaries of the river Krishna, with the warning that he must not return to this land lest he should be put in bonds. In accordance with the order, Bahrām Jang imprisoned Ja'far Ālī and others and banished Ālī Husayn Khān from the town.

Then Nawwāb ṣāhib summoned Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and ordered him to communicate the following message to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur. "You have set your mind on the throne. It is vain to do so. If you cling to that idea it will prove that you are ungrateful to the Almighty Lord. It is better to put out of your mind such useless ideas. Else it will bring shame upon you."

On hearing this rebuke, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, took with him a copy of the holy Qurān, went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba with great apprehensions, and denied the charges. When Nawwāb ṣāhib visited that place, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur swore solemnly by the holy Qurān that he was innocent, and made himself clear of suspicion. He fell at the feet of Nawwāb ṣāhib, who raised him from his feet, embraced him and said: "Surely, you will not have such intentions. But Ālī Husayn Khān, your companion, is a mischievous man. I will not forgive him." Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur submitted: "Your

(1) Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur and Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, his son and successor, were suspected by the British to have entertained feelings of friendship with Tippu Sultan of Mysore, since 1792. As this suspicion gained strength from the year 1796, the desire of the British to take over the entire administration of the territories under the Nawwāb was more distinctly pronounced.

Majesty's pleasure. This slave will be always obedient to you." Yet, the Nawwāb was reserved with him, and showed to him courtesy as required by convention.

THIRD CHAPTER.

The revolt of the army against Qutbūd-Dīn Khān the bakhshī; the appointment of Husāmūl-Mulk Bahādur as shūbadār of Muḥammadpūr; grant of manṣabs and situations to officers; the building of Mubārak-chawkī, known later on as Rōshan-chawkī; the birth of Muḥammadī-miyān; and reasons for payment of the gisṭ to the Company by the sarkār.

As monthly allowances were not paid to the jawāns in charge of Qutbūd-Dīn Khān for about six months, they petitioned to the Khān for the settlement of arrears. But the Khān was evading with some excuse or other. The jawāns, who were suffering from extreme poverty, decided upon revolt.¹ On the morning of the 22nd of Muḥarram in the year 1212 A.H., they brought out cannons from the armoury, placed two on the red gate, and two on the big gate, and looked out for Qutbūd-Dīn Khān.

The Khān rode his horse and was going to the darbār. The jawāns unseated him from horseback and took him in their custody. They seated him on the cannon and dragged it round the bāzār and streets for two or three days and thus degraded and disgraced him. Then they brought him to the gate of the bāgh, and kept him as a captive. The access to the bāgh was impossible till the revolt which continued for three or four days was over.

(1) Such tumults followed by rioting on the part of the sepoys for the settlement of arrears of pay were common not only in the Carnatic, but also in other Indian darbārs, like Ḥaydarābād, Kashmīr, Nepal and other places. See R. Temple: Journals kept in Hyderabad, Kashmir and Nepal, Vol. I, Introduction, p. 16 (1887).

When the information about the revolt of the army reached his ears, the Nawwāb sought of the Company an army to protect himself. The army was encamped in the garden, and the doors of the garden were ordered to be closed. Every day one hundred hūn was paid as bhattā for the maintenance of the army through Riṣā Nawāz Khān, the bakhshī. There was no prospect of suppression of the revolt unless by payment of the arrears. So the Nawwāb gave an order that the treasurer should furnish the necessary amount from the treasury to be distributed to the jawāns through Sayyid Muḥiyyu'd-Dīn Nawāz Khān the risāladār and Sayyid Makhdūm the risāladār, who would get receipts for the payment. The treasurer executed the order and liberated Quṭbu'd-Dīn Khān from captivity. The Khān went before the Nawwāb weeping out thus: "It is not decent or respectable for this slave to live in this town any longer. Please permit me to go to the holy Makka." Nawwāb ṣāḥib comforted him, presented him with a green dushāla from his wardrobe and conferred on him the title Himmat Jang Bahādur.

Section 1.

Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur was often trying to get the post of ṣubadār of Muhammadpūr through the mediation of Colonel Barrett. The Colonel represented frequently to the Nawwāb that Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur may be appointed as ṣubadār. Nawwāb ṣāḥib called Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur on the 14th of Rabī'u'l-awwal in the year 1212 A.H., to the darbār, gave him the appointment, presented him with khilāt, and jawāhirāt. Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur presented nadhṛ to the Nawwāb and then submitted: "Murtaṣā Ḥusayn Khān hopes that your highness will bestow favours on him, that he will be dignified with the titles Bahādur and Jang and be permitted to wear jawāhirāt, play nawbat and ride on an elephant in a canopied litter." The Nawwāb smiled indulgently and said "My brother! this is not easy or free from difficulties. If he could present to me five thousand hūn as nadhṛ, he may indeed be dignified with such honours. Nawwāb Ḥusāmū'l-Mulk consented to this proposal of the Nawwāb. Next day he presented himself at the darbār in Fataḥ-chawkī and submitted thus to the Nawwāb: "Your slave is ready with nadhṛ, as desired by you. May your highness be pleased to look upon him with kindness." The Nawwāb took into account the recommendations of Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the feelings of Nawwāb Ḥusāmū'l-Mulk Bahādur. So he conferred on Murtaẓā Ḥusayan Khān the title Muḥẓẓam Jang Bahādur, permitted him to wear jawāhirāt, nīm-āstīn, and rumāl, to ride on an elephant in a canopied litter, and to play nawbat. The Nawwāb also appointed him to be the nā'ib ṣūbadār of Muḥammadpūr.

Section 2.

Sometime later Nawwāb Ḥusāmū'l-Mulk Bahādur, in consideration of the kindness of Colonel Barrett who always endeavoured to recommend him to the Nawwāb's favour, purchased Mubārak-bāgh from the Colonel. He renovated the building and furnished it with adornments. Then one day he invited Nawwāb ṣāḥib, his sisters, nephews, and others to a sumptuous meal in the morning. Different sorts of dishes were made, fruits from all parts were procured, and the whole thing was done in good style. Thousands of rupees were spent by way of presents to the servants of the Nawwāb. The Nawwāb ṣāḥib was very much delighted with it. He spent two hours pleasantly in the bāgh after the morning food. Then he ate his evening meal in the company of his sisters and then returned to his own residence.

Later on, Ḥusāmū'l-Mulk Bahādur bestowed Mubārak-chawkī upon his daughter-in-law, the wife of Muṭaḥhar Āli Khān, as a gift.

Section 3.

One day Nawwāb ṣāhib started out of Humāyūn-maḥall after dissolving the darbār, intending to go to the house of his second sister. When he reached the pool behind the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall facing Sabz-bangla, the idea to construct an wooden building at that place came to the Nawwāb. Immediately he called the Phulchery mēstri and other masons of the sarkār, and explained to them the plan of the building. He directed Muḥammad Ma'sūm to bring cash for the purpose of purchasing the necessary building materials. When the money was brought, he entrusted it with Sayyid Ibrāhīm the ṣubadār and enjoined on him and the Pulcheri mēstri that they should quickly complete the building. In accordance with the instructions of the Nawwāb, Sayyid Ibrāhīm and others finished their work in a short time. After the completion of the building, the Nawwāb frequently went there after dissolving the darbār at Humayūn-maḥall and stayed there a long time. He got ready a small boat providing accommodation for ten or twelve men, and left it in the pool. At noon he made some men row in that boat and enjoyed the tamasha. As this new building was contiguous to the house of his second sister, the Nawwāb visited her house frequently. By the grace of Allāh, one day the Nawwāb made arrangements for the screening of the area from the house of his second sister and his last sister and from the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall as far as the gate of Chārat-khāna; then he invited his sisters and others at about 8 o'clock in the morning, had breakfast with them, and spent the whole day in seeing the boat-tamasha and other tamashas. Then he gave away large presents.

The Nawwāb told his second sister thus: "This building is put up here because it is nearer to your house."

"When the ridge-piece was put, I tied to the beam a red piece of cloth with rice and other things in it. Of the duṣhāla, one I gave to the dārughā, the other to the mēstri."

CH. 3—BIRTH OF MUḤAMMADI MIYAN

The sister told the Nawwāb in reply: "May Allāh exalted be He, make you fortunate in this new building! May it be agreeable to you! May Allāh grant you long life and happiness."

As soon as the Nawwāb heard his sister utter the word Mubārak (Fortunate) he said, "I give the name Mubārak-chawkī to this building, because you mentioned that word in your talk."

The royal repast was brought from his own palace and from the house of his sister. They all had their afternoon dinner. Then the sisters took leave of the Nawwāb while he went to Fataḥ-chawkī. The Nawwāb sent for Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and enjoined on him as follows:

"Every morning after breakfast you should go to Mubārak-chawkī with your friends and teachers and remain there till the time of after-noon-prayer."

In obedience to the order of his father, Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur spent his time in Mubārak-chawkī from 9 o'clock in the morning till evening, and then returned. Sometimes Nawwāb ṣāhib also visited that place.

Nawwāb ṣāhib intended that Mubārak-chawkī should excel the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall. But he had neither the time nor the opportunity to carry out his plan.

Section 4.

Muḥammadi Miyān, the son of the author of this chronicle, was born at 7 o'clock in the morning of the 18th Rabī'u'l-awwal, 1212 A.H. in the house of Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā, his grand-mother. As the child was born in the 7th month, Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā was very much worried. She inquired of every one about the case of a child born in the 7th month, whether there would be any trouble for that child.

All her sisters tried in whatsoever manner to meet her doubts adequately, yet Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam did not find satisfaction in their explanations. Nawwāb šāhib also stayed at her house with his sisters, and spoke consolatory words to her.

When hakims visited the house, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur called Mubāriz Jang Bahādur and said to him: "Console Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam. She is subjected to severe strain of mental pain, because of the birth of the child in the seventh month."

The Bahādur sent the following message to Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam: "Exalted Bēgam šāhiba! You should not give way to grief or doubt. Many babies are born in the seventh month; this slave also was born in the seventh month. You need not have any anxiety. A male child born in the eighth month does not live." Bēgam šāhiba was comforted a little by the assertions of Mubāriz Jang Bahādur. Nawwāb šāhib sent for Mīr Abū Ṭālib Khān Bahādur and Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān Bahādur also to the house of his sister and said to them: "Mubāriz Jang Bahādur has sent news to my sister predicting prosperous life for the new-born babe; you also convey to her whatever ideas you have on this."

The two Khāns communicated the following news to the Bēgam šāhiba: "The child born in the seventh month will be lucky and blessed with long life. Dargāh Qulī Khān also was born in the seventh month. A momentary look at him will dispel all your fears. You may be at peace; there is no need for anxiety. This child will be lucky and prosperous."

Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam in accordance with the advice of experienced men, spread cotton on a plantain leaf and laid the baby on it and tended it carefully. Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II visited joyfully the lying-in-chamber, took out of his pocket a piece of shabnam cloth, a very thin and beautiful fabric, white in colour, containing the length of two rūmāls used by Nawwāb Muḥammad Ali

Wālājāh Bahādur and gave it to Muḥammadatu'n-nisā,¹ the daughter of the Bēgam šāḥiba for covering the child so that it may bring luck. Then he said: "Allāh, exalted be He, has blessed my dear sister with this grandchild. You should not have any anxiety. By the grace of Allāh, this beloved grandchild will develop into a man of honour and fame. Be happy. I have given him the rūmāls worn by your noble ancestor; let the babe be covered with them. No other child was honoured by such a lucky gift, but your child has this unique honour. By the grace of Allāh, it is certain that the child will be lucky."

Nawwāb Malikū'n-nisā Bēgam rejoiced at this lucky gift and the encouraging speech of Nawwāb šāḥib; she thanked her elder brother and submitted: "He will be under the shadow of your exalted highness, and looked after affectionately. He will be a lucky man, with your favours."

Karīmu'n-nisā Bēgam šāḥiba known as Ḥaẓrat Bēgam, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāḥiba, 'Umdatū'n-nisā Bēgam šāḥiba, ladies of the family of Najībullāh Khān Bahādur, women belonging to different families from Gopamaw, Prasan Bī šāḥiba and others stayed in the house of Malikū'n-nisā Bēgam šāḥiba from the date of confinement till the ceremony on the sixth day. Nawwāb šāḥib also took up his residence in the dīwān-khāna of Majdu'd-Dawla from the date of the birth of the child. Everyday he had his breakfast there along with his nephews, and then attended the darbār held in Mubārak-chawki known as Rōshan-chawki. After dissolving the darbār he returned to the house of his second sister and had his afternoon dinner. He kept up this practice till the ceremony on the sixth day. Nawwāb šāḥib got two thousand rupees from Muḥammad Ma'sūm and sent that amount through his senior sister to Malikū'n-nisā Bēgam for her expenses. On the occasion of the ceremony on the sixth day, the Nawwāb wrote thus on a paper strewn with gold dust.

(1) The mother of the baby.

“27th Rabī‘ul-awwal, 1212 A.H.¹

“By the grace of Allāh! eminent is His glory! Ghulām Muḥammad ‘Alī known as Muḥammadī Miyān, the grandchild of Nawwāb Malikū‘n-nisā Bēgam, my dear sister, be ennobled with the title Naṣībū‘d-Dawla Ghulām Muḥtabā Khān Bahādur Asad Jang, and the manṣab of two thousand, ḥām, naqqāra and be distinguished by the favours of nīm-āstīn, rūmāl, jawāhir-i-muraṣṣa’, and pearls. Allāh, the Glorious, and the Most High, will make these large gifts agreeable to the grandchild of my dear sister.

“Allāh is with us all.

“Ghulām Ḥusayn ‘Umdatul-Umarā Wālājāh.”

The Nawwāb also wrote another chitty relating to the parwāna for the grant of jāgīr of Balkūdām², known as Ṣāḥīb-nagar yielding an annual income of one thousand and two hundred hūn to Muḥammadatu‘n-nisā Bēgam, the daughter of Malikū‘n-nisā Bēgam. He signed the parwāna, arranged to affix to it his own seal and stamps of the officers of kachahrī in accordance with the rules and left it in the office of Colonel Barrett Bahādur. In accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, Colonel Barrett sent the parwāna through Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur to Nawwāb ṣāḥīb in the house of Malikū‘n-nisā Bēgam at the time of the ceremony on the sixth day. Nawwāb ṣāḥīb had kept with him the farmān, and the parwāna. In the course of the ceremony, the Nawwāb placed the farmān for titles in the hands of the baby, and the parwāna for jāgīr in the hands of his mother. The jāgīr was in possession of this humble person till the kingdom of the Carnatic was confiscated.

(1) Calculating the date mentioned in section 4, (p. 89) it ought to be 23. It is not clear which of the dates mentioned is wrong.

(2) This may probably be identified with Volcondah in the Trichinopoly District.

FOURTH CHAPTER.

Nawwāb favours his servants with appointments; this humble author suffers from small-pox; the marriages of Shahsawār Jang and Tājīd-Dīn Khān, the younger son of Nizāmīd-Dīn Aḥmad Khān Bahādur, the feast to Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II in the garden of Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and Shāh Mahmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī; the Nawwāb's displeasure with Nūrīd-Dīn Khān Bahādur Hashmat Jang.

After he ascended the throne Nawwāb ṣāhib often used to confer dignity upon everyone by granting appointments and manṣabs appropriate to the rank of each person. These appointments were made either at his own sweet will or through the recommendation of his senior sister, or at the suggestion of Colonel Barrett Bahādur, his adviser and dīwān.

For example: ʿAlī Nawāz Khān, the urṣ-bēgī for a long time, was dignified with the title Bahādur and appointed to be the qilādār of Muḥammadpūr. As he stood high in royal favour, he was able to procure for Mīrzā Ghazanfar ʿAlī, his brother's elder son, the title Hādī ʿAlī Khān, and the post of urṣ-bēgī. He also secured for Ṣafdar ʿAlī, his brother's younger son, the title Haydar Nawāz Khān, and the post of nāʾib to the qilādār of Muḥammadpūr. Then ʿAlī Nawāz Khān started with his nephew to Muḥammadpūr.

Shahsawār Jang always remained in the presence of the Nawwāb and was also in charge of the mēwa-khāna and the royal stable.

Mīr Mahdī ʿAlī Khān was honoured with the title Bahādur and appointed to be the dārūgha of buildings where elephants and camels were stabled.

Laṭīf Bēg was the dārūgha of horses used for chārat and by troopers.

Mīrzā Haydar ʿAlī was the dārūgha of shikār-khāna.

Quṭbū'd-Dīn Khān Bahādur Himmat Jang was appointed to be the amīn over the affairs of Nattharnagar, till the differences between Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur and Naṣīru'l-Mulk Bahādur settled down, and sent to Nattharnagar as Nawwāb's representative to settle disputes between the two brothers.

Thus the Nawwāb honoured everyone with appointments suitable to his rank and capacity. All these details were given in the registers kept in the office of the dīwān, bakhshī and mīr-sāmān.

As I do not know other details, they are not recorded here.

Section 1.

The writer of this chronicle had high fever on the 21st of Ramaṣān in the year 1212 A.H. and three days after that he had an attack of small-pox. In a week, the entire body from head to foot was full of eruptions of small-pox. All the yūnānī and miṣrī ḥakīms in the service of the sarkār were present throughout night and day. As usual the Nawwāb took up his residence in the house of his younger sister because of the illness of his nephew; the Nawwāb's aunt and his other sisters also stayed there. Nawwāb ṣāhib made arrangements for the distribution of daily allowance to the ḥakīms and others according to the rank of each person. He ordered that fifteen yūnānī and six miṣrī ḥakīms should be on duty at the house of his sister. He gave instructions that dinner be served up twice to Maliku'l-ḥukamā Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur from the royal kitchen. Thus the Maliku'l-ḥukamā continued to visit my mother's house till this humble person recovered from his illness.

When Nawwāb ṣāhib came to see me in my sick bed, he granted me a daily allowance of five hūn-kuruk. One day he spoke to me kindly thus: "Mention what you want, I shall grant it." In obedience to this order, I expressed my desire that I should be favoured with the presents of nīm-astīn, green rūmāl-shāl with the dūshāla worn by the Nawwāb; a pocket watch of the Nawwāb, one farshī ghariyāl, one Bengali suksāwan and one chārat with horses inclusive of board-wages. On the following day the kind and compassionate Nawwāb favoured me with all things asked for. He complied with the wishes of my mother till I was quite recovered from my illness.

In brief, the small-pox developed day by day. One day Nawwāb 'Umdatū'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba, my mother, despaired of my life owing to the severe attack of small-pox, and felt deep sorrow for me. When the two sisters saw her in that condition, they sent word to the Nawwāb. Immediately, the Nawwāb sent for English doctors, brought together yūnānī and mişrī ḥakīms, and visited the patient along with these men and Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān Bahādur. When the condition of the patient was examined, the Nawwāb asked Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān, "When will he get better?" The ḥakīm said in reply thus: "Six months ago I met Şāhibu'd-Dawla in the dīwān-khāna of Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and told him in the presence of Ḥakīm Aḥmad Khān and Ḥakīm 'Abdu'r-Razzāq Khān as follows:

"It can be known from your face that you will have a severe attack of small-pox. It will be better for you to phlebotomize. If not, it will go hard with you and the small-pox will do you much harm. It may not be possible for the ḥakīms to bring you through, and it will endanger your life. I also conveyed this news to his mother. But they did not pay heed to the advice of this humble slave. Allāh is great, His Glory is eminent, and His favours are universal. He is the absolute Ḥakīm. His institution for the care of the sick is endowed with the ability to cure all. The patient may recover. But symptoms are not encouraging."

After listening to this, Nawwāb šāhib lost hope of the patient's recovery and secretly informed his senior sister about this. Next day he called in two or three doctors through

Colonel Barrett Bahādur, and sent them to examine the patient. They returned immediately after entering the room, and submitted to the Nawwāb, "We have neither seen nor heard of such a case. It is certain that the patient cannot be recovered to life. Whenever your highness intends to visit his room, let a bottle of grape-vinegar be sprinkled first on the wall and then your highness may get into the room." Immediately Nawwāb šāhib sent for many bottles of grape-vinegar, sprinkled them as per directions of doctors and then took them inside the room. After examining the condition of the patient they came out and informed the Nawwāb of the extremely serious condition. After hearing their opinion Nawwāb šāhib also lost all hopes of the patient's recovery. He stayed night and day in the house of his sister and exerted himself to save the sick person.

The patient gradually lost his power to resist the growing disease and became very weak. His condition became worse on the twentieth day. He lost all his senses; he could neither speak nor hear, and to all appearance he was a corpse. On seeing this condition, Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam was extremely distressed, lost all hopes of his recovery and resigned herself to the mercy of Allāh. She got leaves of the nīm tree, soaked them in hot water, took them out after a time and produced a paste by grinding them. She went with that paste to the patient's room, followed by two or three maid-servants, and plastered his body with it. About an hour later, she slowly washed the body with tepid water exposed to the sun's heat with nīm leaves soaked in it, and cleaned the pus and other matter. Then she closed the doors of the room and burnt aloes wood. By the grace of Allāh, his condition became better by the evening.

During the illness of this humble servant, his wife was in the sixth month of pregnancy. She was very much worried and distressed on account of the precarious condition of her husband. She wept for him and resigned herself to the mercy, of Allāh, Who is the refuge of the distressed, and supplicated to the Prophet, the chief of the world. After midnight she saw in a dream a venerable person wrapped up in green cloth. He said "O! the slave of Fāṭima, if you hold the life of the elder more dear, then abandon the life of the younger one that is in your womb. When the child is born it will not live." She submitted in reply: "Of course the life of the elder is dearer than that of the younger. I wish my husband recovers his health."

"By the grace of Allāh", he condescended to say, "From to-day your husband will be restored to health. Let him be given the name Ghulām Zāmin; he will attain great benefits by means of that name."

The suppliant woke up very early in the morning, performed ablution, and said the obligatory early-morning-prayer and the thanksgiving prayer in two genuflexions for the joyful tidings she received in her dream. She spoke to a sayyida about her dream and made inquiries about her husband's health.

The bountiful Lord showed mercy on the patient from that day, and he recovered his health gradually. My mother-in-law was always in attendance night and day with the wives of charukīdārs and administered to my comfort.

The beneficence and liberality of His prophet (peace be on him) was the cause for the recovery from this illness in about a week.

My noble mother and aunt offered thanks to the true Ḥakīm saying thus: "Praise be to Allāh! A thousand thanks to Him! A week before, there was absolutely no hope, for his life was despaired of by all the hakīms. But the absolute Healer preserved him by His power."

The hakīms also were surprised to learn the news of his recovery. They submitted thus to the Nawwāb: "It can only be said that this is God's grace; the cord of his life is strong. Else how can he recover from this serious illness? It is absolutely impossible.” The Nawwāb ṣāhib said to them as follows: “Of course the cord of his life is strong. Besides, his mother and wife expressed much grief for him and supplicated to Allāh for his recovery. Finally, Allāh, glory be to Him and exalted be He, took notice of the drudgery and distress of his mother-in-law and showed mercy on the patient.”

In brief: Two months later I had my bath after recovery from illness and my mother offered food and alms in the names of holy men. On that day Nawwāb ‘Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur made a present of two thousand rupees to my mother for the expenses of fātiḥas and gifts to hakīms and chawkidārs. Nawwāb Malikun-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba, my mother-in-law, also arranged a sumptuous feast in her house.

Three or four months passed, then a son was born to this author and he was given the name Abdul-Walī. Nawwāb ṣāhib granted one thousand rupees to meet the expenses on the occasion, but the child joined to divine mercy within a week.

Section 2.

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba obtained the permission of Nawwāb ‘Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur to fix up the marriage of Shahsawār Jang with the daughter of Muḥammad Ḥayāt Qādir Alī Khān, the son of ‘Iṣmat Bībī. She invited the Bībī to her own house, settled up the alliance finally and communicated the news to Nawwāb ṣāhib.

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam secured four thousand rupees from the treasury of the sarkār for the expenses of marriage on both the sides. She sent two thousand rupees to Qādir Alī Khān, and appointed Yāsīn Muḥammad Khān to make everything ready for the marriage. The house of ‘Iṣmat Bībī was set apart for the bride's party; the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam for the ladies of the bridegroom's party; the dīwān-khāna of Sirāju'l-Mulk for the mānja-khāna of the bridegroom. Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam invited the mother of Shahsawār Jang and fixed her lodging.

She appointed Mir Mahdī 'Alī Khān and Shujā'at 'Alī Khān to provide the guests with necessary things. Thus Nawwāb Sulṭān-ū'n-nisā Bēgam was in charge of all arrangements for the marriage.

She invited her two sisters and relatives to a feast and commenced the marriage celebration. All the ceremonies relating to the bride and bridegroom were punctiliously observed. Nawwāb's sisters came every day to the shādī-khāna and attended to the ceremonies. Nawwāb ṣāhib conferred dignity on the shādī mahfil by his presence with his ministers on two or three nights. Those who were invited to the party came there every night. On the barāt night, Nawwāb ṣāhib invited the bridegroom to his palace, fastened the sihra, and sent him back on horseback. On the day of jalwa, Nawwāb ṣāhib visited the house of the bride with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and his own nephews in response to the expressed wish of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā and joined the majlis of uqd, and in the rasm of jalwa.

After the completion of the ceremonies, Nawwāb ṣāhib addressed Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, directing his attention to Qādir 'Alī Khān, smiled sweetly and said "Look at the generosity of Qādir 'Alī Khān! how noble he is! Out of regard for me he agreed to give his daughter in marriage to Shahsawār Jang."

Then he spoke to Qādir 'Alī Khān thus: "Khān ṣāhib! I am very glad that you gave your daughter in marriage to 'Abdu'l-Karīm. Today I confer on you the title Bahādur and raise your allowance from fifty rupees to one hundred rupees; by the grace of Allāh the sum of one hundred rupees will be paid to you month after month." Qādir 'Alī Khān submitted a nadh'r of five rupees, paid his obeisance and submitted as follows:

"May Allāh, exalted be He, grant you long life! We wish you well. Our ancestors got sustenance from this family of Anwar. By all means you will be pleased to keep a sustained effort for our subsistence."

On the occasion of the rūnumā'ī ceremony, Nawwāb ṣāhib presented to Qādir 'Alī Khān one thousand rupees on his own behalf and on behalf of his sisters, and then returned to his own residence.

'Iṣmat Bibī led the bride and bridegroom to the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā with all the paraphernalia. She made the bride prostrate before Nawwāb ṣāhib, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā and her other sisters and submitted: "She has been my grand-daughter till this day. Now she has become a slave in your house. I hope that the compassionate Nawwāb will always bestow his kindness on this slave." Nawwāb raised her from his feet, folded her affectionately in his arms and presented her with some jewels set with precious stones during the rūnumā'ī ceremony. All the sisters paid their obeisance and presented nadh'r to the Nawwāb. In accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā called the mother of Shahsawār Jang and consigned the bride to her care, addressing her with expressions of joy. On the fourth day after the completion of the ceremony of chawthī, they sent away the bride and the bridegroom along with the mother of Shahsawār Jang.

Section 3.

The marriage of Tāju'd-Dīn Khān, the younger son of Nizāmud-Dīn Aḥmad Khān Bahādur, was fixed up with Raḥīya Bēgam, the daughter of Nawwāb 'Umdatul-'Umarā Bahādur by his mistress attached to Mahtāb Bēgam. It was celebrated in the same splendid manner as the marriage of Shahsawār Jang. In accordance with the order of Nawwāb ṣāhib, Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā conducted the marriage. She arranged with Ra'īsu'l-'Umarā Bahādur that his dīwān-khāna be the mānja-khāna and dīwān-khāna of the bridegroom, and with Shāh Bēgam, her own daughter, that her house be the house of the bride. She received seven thousand rupees from the sarkār for the expenses of marriage on both the sides. She spent three thousand rupees on behalf of the bridegroom and four thousand rupees on behalf of the bride. The marriage was celebrated in a fitting manner. The number of ladies who were guests and other women were more on this occasion than was the case in the marriage of Shahsawār Jang Bahādur. At the time of jalwa, Nawwāb ṣāhib was present with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and other relatives. After finishing the ceremony of chawthī, they sent the bride and the bridegroom with all the paraphernalia to a separate house adjoining the residence of Mahtāb Bēgam.

Section 4.

One day Nawwāb ṣāhib said to Bahrām Jang, "I learn that you have arranged your garden in a beautiful manner delighted in by many. I propose to visit your bāgh one day after my morning drive and wish to have my breakfast there."

Bahrām Jang Bahādur paid his obeisance and submitted: "The bāgh is yours and I am your humble servant. Your highness' visit to the bāgh will confer upon this slave great honour and distinction and it will cause the tree of my desire to blossom out into a fruit tree."

Since that day Bahrām Jang Bahādur was forming plans for the feast, and fitting up the garden for the occasion. After finishing all arrangements he represented deferentially to the Nawwāb on the 3rd of Shawwāl in the year 1212 A.H. thus:

"If your highness could shed light on the small garden of this slave by your presence with princes and nephews after the morning drive, I will be the most favoured slave." Nawwāb ṣāhib gave a smiling consent.

In response to the invitation, Nawwāb ṣāhib shed radiance around the garden of Bahrām Jang by his presence with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son, and nephews, after the morning drive on the 4th of Shawwāl. In obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, Taqī 'Alī Khān Bahādur, Shujā'at 'Alī Khān, Mīr Abū Ṭālib Khān, Muḥammad Amīnū'd-Dīn Khān, Dargāh Qulī Khān, and 'Alī Nawāz Khān were also present at that place. Then the Nawwāb gave orders to send quickly a trooper to invite Ḥaẓrat Mawlānā Abdu'l-'Alī Ṣāḥib, 'Āshūrī Lillāhī, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. In response to the invitation these persons also arrived at the bāgh in a short while. The Nawwāb sat together with these persons and had his breakfast. Afterwards he went round the bāgh. The Nawwāb's warm approbation of the excellence of the garden made the rose-buds blossom.

Bahrām Jang Bahādur presented to the Nawwāb 121 rupees, some trays of khilāt,¹ and a number of trays containing fruits by way of nadhr. Nawwāb ṣāḥib gave orders to distribute the fruits to all those present there. After spending an hour, Nawwāb ṣāḥib returned to his residence and bade farewell to his companions.

Section 5.

One day Nawwāb ṣāḥib spoke affably to Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāḥib Sāwī in the darbār as follows: "It is long time since this humble person partook of food in your house. I wish I have dinner one day."

The Shāh ṣāḥib made everything ready for the feast in about two or three days and then submitted to the Nawwāb as follows: "If your highness could kindly come tomorrow afternoon at dinner time with princes, and the officers who were present at the bāgh of Bahrām Jang, it will add lustre to the house. This will be an act of kindness to the poor and destitute."

(1) Khilāt is presented by the superior to the inferior. The practice vice versa is opposed to established custom.

CH. 4—SHAH MAHMUD ENTERTAINS THE NAWWAB

In response to the request of Shāh ṣāhib, the Nawwāb started the next day at the appointed time to go for dinner. Other guests also accompanied him. The Nawwāb said the fātiḥa for Shāh Dastgīr ṣāhib, and came to the dīwān-khāna. After partaking of the food served with different kinds of dishes, he praised the daintiness of food. Then he returned to his residence.

In response to the invitation of Shāh Maḥmūd ṣāhib in the month of Rajab, Nawwāb ṣāhib who had very high regard for him, attended the fātiḥa for Shāh Dastgīr ṣāhib in the early morning and gave leave to his companions to partake of the food.

Section 6.

Ḥashmat Jang Bahādur failed to pay the qisṭ money in the kachahrī of Colonel Barrett Bahādur, the dīwān, as per the iqrār-nāma. The ryots also complained to the Nawwāb of his tyranny and acts contrary to the orders of the Nawwāb. Therefore the Nawwāb recalled him from his office and kept him as a prisoner in the garden of Māskilith. His personal effects and other things were removed in about twelve carts to the house of his elder sister. After some time Bahrām Jang and Colonel Barrett Bahādur, endeavoured to recommend to the Nawwāb that Ḥashmat Jang might be pardoned for his faults. The compassionate Nawwāb agreed to their proposal. Ḥashmat Jang was released from the prison, and his personal effects that were in the custody of his sister were restored to him. As Dharmāsam Mudali stood surety for him, he was appointed by the Nawwāb to another taluk.

Section 7.

I'tibār Khān was earnestly desirous to get from the sarkār the title Jang, and presents of rūmāl-shāl, and nīm-āstīn through the mediation of Nawwāb Sulṭān'un-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba. One day she happened to find suitable occasion to broach the subject to the Nawwāb. She got the following reply: "Colonel Barrett is highly displeased with him, for I'tibār Khān does not pay the qist, as per agreement. If I'tibār Khān could pay twelve thousand rupees as nadhṛ to the sarkār, he may perhaps be distinguished by such honours as desired by him. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba informed I'tibār Khān about the views of the Nawwāb. The Bahādur who had already agreed to give 5,000 rupees as nadhṛ to Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, consented to pay also this additional nadhṛ.

One day Nawwāb ṣāḥib invited I'tibār Khān Bahādur to the green-chair room. The Nawwāb came out of the house of his senior sister after dinner in the afternoon, called I'tibār Khān to his presence, conferred on him the title Babar Jang, and presented him with nīm-āstīn and white rūmāl-shāl from his own wardrobe. He received the nadhṛ through Colonel Barrett Bahādur in secrecy.

PART III.

1213-1214 A.H. [1798-1799 A.D.]

FIRST CHAPTER.

The Nawwāb favours Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur with the post of fawjdār of the taluk of Nellore; the marriage of Tājīl-Umarā Bahādur; the Nawwāb receives a letter from Shāh Ghāzī Pādshāh of Delhi at Kalas-mahall.

Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur agreed to pay one thousand rupees as *nadh*r to Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā and submitted through her a petition to the Nawwāb asking humbly for the following: the post of fawjdār of the taluk of Nellore, the privilege to nawbat, to ride on an elephant with a canopy, to maintain a trooper and the right to confer titles on his employees. When the Nawwāb went through the list he smilingly said: "Colonel Barrett Bahādur is invested with full authority to deal with affairs of the Government. This petition has to go to the Colonel. I shall also speak to him. Of course it may be favourably received by him. Other things rest with me to decide. If Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur consents to pay five thousand rupees as *nadh*r for all the favours asked for, surely he will be favoured with the appointment of fawjdār as well as the other privileges mentioned in the petition." In accordance with this generous view of the Nawwāb, Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur made a separate petition to Colonel Barrett Bahādur for the post of fawjdār of the taluk of Nellore. He importuned and solicited Colonel Barrett Bahādur for the appointment and paid frequent visits to his office.

One day Colonel Barrett Bahādur informed Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur thus: "By the grace of Allāh I have submitted to the Nawwāb your petition for the post of fawjdār. I shall get it sanctioned. Please keep ready the nadhr." Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādūr replied, "I have reliance upon your kindness. After I am appointed to be the fawjdār, I shall be favoured with khil'at from the royal wardrobe and jawāhirāt. Thus I shall become eminent among the nobles and my equals."

Next day Colonel Barrett Bahādūr invited Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādūr to Fataḥ-chawkī at the time of darbār and got him to execute a qarār-nāma in accordance with the regulations of the sarkār. Then he introduced him to the Nawwāb and dignified him with the order of appointment to the post of fawjdār, with khil'at and other things asked for in the petition. Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādūr paid his obeisance to the Nawwāb and submitted one thousand rupees as nadhr.

Considering the recommendations of his sister and the opinion of Colonel Barrett Bahādūr, Nawwāb ṣāḥib invested him with privilege to nawbat, to ride on an elephant with a canopy, to maintain a trooper and other rights sought for in the petition. The order granting these was signed by the Nawwāb. Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādūr paid secretly to the Nawwāb five thousand rupees through Chīnā Mūdālī. Then the Nawwāb made an order that Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādūr should ride an elephant, followed by nawbat and troopers and go in that manner to the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, submit nadhr to her and then return to his house.

In obedience to the order of Nawwāb ṣāḥib, the Bahādūr went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, sent her twenty-one rupees as nadhr-dastī and made over the payment of one thousand rupees, the promised amount of nadhr to Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, to Kishnasāmī Mūdālī her banker, and took leave of her. Then he went to the house of Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, submitted five rupees as nadhr and returned to his house. He arranged to give presents to every 'uhdadār and others who were present in the procession and bade them all farewell. He met his wife and told her in detail the favours he received from the Nawwāb. Then he came out of the zenana and entered his dīwān-khāna where he received congratulations from all.

Next day he went to the bāḡh of Colonel Barrett Bahādur to express his gratitude for the favours of the Nawwāb and the kind endeavour of Colonel Barrett Bahādur. The Colonel addressed him with expressions of joy on his appointment and said "It is necessary for you that you should always remember the favours of the Nawwāb, and never fall short of enthusiastic loyalty to the Nawwāb. You should be hearty and persistent in all your duties and show no sign of exhaustion or discomposure. You should neither be a transgressor nor give room for complaints. You must start quickly to your taluk."

In accordance with the suggestions of Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur made preparations for his journey in a week. He sent necessary things in advance and looked forward to the day when he would bid farewell to the Nawwāb. In the meanwhile the compiler of this chronicle had an attack of small-pox. A detailed account of it has already been narrated in Part II, chapter 4 of this book. After my recovery from illness, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur delayed further because some important affair prevented his journey. Then he took leave of the Nawwāb and went post-haste to his destination. He reached his taluk and assumed the reins of government. He ennobled his companions by conferring upon them the titles Khān, Bahādur, Jang, etc., as per his list endorsed by the Nawwāb. He was always industrious and attentive to his duties.

Section 1.

Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II was busy forming plans for the marriage of Tāju'l Umarā Bahādur, his beloved son. In accordance with the suggestion of his senior sister, he invited Sarfarāz 'Alī Khān Bahādur, son of Nawwāb Shukōh'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur to her house one day, created a feeling in him that he will be elevated in rank and dignity and said to him thus:

“I have a desire that my beloved son should attain the status of the son of Raḥmatu'n-nisā Bēgam, your sister, through your mediation. If you could settle this affair I shall rejoice at it.”

After listening to the Nawwāb, Sarfarāz 'Alī Khān took his leave, went to the house of his sister and informed her all about the interview with the Nawwāb. They were much worried. They did not know whether they should accept or decline the offer. It was difficult to settle it either way. They were fully susceptible to the inconvenience that would result from the acceptance of the offer and also to the displeasure of the ruler that would ensue on the refusal. Nawwāb ṣāhib again sent a message to Sarfarāz 'Alī Khān Bahādur through Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mir Asadullāh Khān Bahādur. Sarfarāz 'Alī Khān Bahādur, having no alternative, wrung consent from his sister, wrote out an 'arṣī seeking information on certain points and sent it to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāhib read through it and gave his assent to it. He immediately went to the house of his senior sister, invited his other sisters there and after consulting with them all, he made the match and fixed the 13th of Rajab as the first day of the marriage festivities. In accordance with the advice of his senior sister, the Nawwāb sent a large sum of money to Sarfarāz 'Alī Khān Bahādur through Sālār Jang for the expenses of marriage on the side of the bride. He fixed upon the dīvān-khāna of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur for the chamber of the bridegroom; the dīvān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall for majlis in the night and the house of his senior sister for the women of the bridegroom's party. Then he gave orders for decorating these places. He said to his elder sister thus: “I invest you with authority to conduct this marriage. I expect that you would pay attention to all details big and small. From beginning to end this marriage must be conducted in a manner appropriate to my rank. You may get from the treasury whatever amount you may need and I have instructed Colonel Barrett Bahādur to pay you."

He ordered Sālār Jang Bahādur to look after the arrangements for lights and decorations of the big dīwān-khāna. He appointed Bahrām Jang Bahādur to supervise the arrangements for lights and procession every day when the bridegroom starts from mānja-khāna to the big dīwān-khāna and from the dīwān-khāna back to the mānja-khāna. He gave instructions to Bahrām Jang Bahādur that at about 9 o'clock in the night the bridegroom should be carried in a mahādōl with all paraphernalia, accompanied by lights and display of firework to the dīwān-khāna. After witnessing the nautch, and the distribution of betel leaves, flower and other things, the bridegroom must be led back to the mānja-khāna in the same manner of procession.

In obedience to the orders of the Nawwāb, the dīwān-khāna, palace and women's apartments were furnished, by the first of Rajab, with carpets, lights, masnad, shūmiyāna and other necessary things. The walls of the mānja-khāna were painted in a variety of colours which presented the appearance of a fresh spring garden.

Nawwāb šāhib visited Fataḥ-chawkī on the second of Rajab at about 9 o'clock in the morning, asked for a sheet of paper strewn with gold dust and wrote upon it the invitation, embellished with flowers of rhetoric, to Lādli Bēgam šāhiba, his own aunt, the wife of Nawwāb Shukōhu'l-Mulk Bahādur, requesting her to be present at the marriage of Tāju'l-Umarā, his beloved son. He adorned it with his own signature and sent it through Bahrām Jang Bahādur with the following instructions:

"You should read this invitation for marriage with good intonation and expressively to those present in the darbār-i-ām at Fataḥ-chawkī; then take four copies of this, send three copies to the three sisters and the fourth to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, my brother. Then you should take the original with you to the house of my exalted aunt, and after paying obeisance, deliver it to her." Bahrām Jang Bahādur executed the orders of the Nawwāb.

When Bahrām Jang read the letter at the darbār, Mawlānā Ṣāhib, Shāh Qudratullāh Ṣāhib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī, and other shaykhs, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and other nobles and officers of the Government were present. The character and tone of the letter, the picturesqueness and the ornate style of the Nawwāb, won high praise from the audience. In the meanwhile the Nawwāb himself added lustre to the darbār by his presence. All those present paid their obeisance to him. Some of the nobles submitted: "The invitation letter is written in a delightful style; the letter is a gulistān; the cheerful details contained in it bears the semblance of a būstān. It increases the delight. Every sentence is a gem, which will be a source of pleasure to those versed in all branches of learning; every word in it is a touchstone for testing the elocution of an orator. We hope that we will be permitted to take copies of it."

The following order was issued to Bahrām Jang Bahādur: "Whoever has the desire to take a copy of it, he may be permitted to do so." Bahrām Jang obeyed the orders of the Nawwāb. Then the Bahādur took the original with him to the house of the noble mother of Dilēr Jang Bahādur Nawwāb Naṣīru'd-Dawla II, paid obeisance on behalf of the Nawwāb and sent in the invitation to her. She sent back the following reply:

"I wish the Nawwāb joy and luck. May Allāh make this affair a source of happiness to Nawwāb ṣāhib, his friends and well-wishers."

At the time of compiling this chronicle the author endeavoured to get a true copy of the original letter of invitation from the office of Dilēr Jang Shukōhu'l-Mulk Naṣīru'd-Dawla Bahādur II through Sharafu'l-Umarā Anwāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. The copy of the letter was delivered to the writer of this chronicle by Muḥabbat Alī Khān, son of Raḥmān Alī Khān. It is included in this book.¹

Before the marriage festivities were begun, khilat and tōrah were distributed to the Governor and other sardārs of his council, to Nawwāb's brothers, sisters, relatives, and women, ministers, nobles and all officers high and low. Letters were sent inviting every one to be present from the commencement of the marriage with the ceremony of chitr on the 14th of Rajab till the last day of the celebration. In response to the invitation, Ḥusāmu'l Mulk Bahādur from Muḥammadpūr², and Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur from Nellore reached Madras before the marriage festivities began. The rasm of mānja was observed on the 13th of Rajab, 1213 A.H. The rasm of chitr was gone through in the presence of Nawwāb ṣāḥib on the 14th of Rajab at the big dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall where a large crowd assembled.

Every day people assembled in the mānja-khāna, had breakfast and dinner in the company of the bridegroom and spent the whole day there from morning till 9 o'clock in the night, listening to music. In accordance with the order of Nawwāb ṣāḥib, Bahrām Jang Bahādur went to the mānja-khāna at about 10 o'clock, adorned the bridegroom from head to foot with fresh khilat and ornaments set with precious stones. Then the bridegroom was decked with flowers at the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam. After this Bahrām Jang Bahādur helped the bridegroom to get into the mahādōl and escorted him with all paraphernalia, innumerable lights and firework to the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-mahall, where arrangements were made for dance and music. First, flowers and betel leaves were distributed. Then dance and music began. Musicians who would enliven the spirits, and heart-ravishing dancers were assigned different places in the dīwān-khāna. The bridegroom witnessed the dance and then returned to the mānja-khāna in the same manner of procession.

Now and then Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur added grace to the majlis by his presence. He took up his seat behind the masnad of the bridegroom and witnessed the dance and music. Then he would go away sometimes before the party broke up or sometimes along with the bridegroom. The ceremonialism that pertained to the bride and the bridegroom were observed with all paraphernalia to and from the big garden of Mylapore.

One day during the marriage, Nawwāb šāhib intended to invite the members of the Governor's council for dinner and thus create an opportunity to remove the displeasure of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, his sister, who was annoyed because the sardārs of the Governor's Council were not invited to the marriage of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur.¹ The Nawwāb instructed Colonel Barrett Bahādur to write a letter in English as if addressed by the Governor to the Nawwāb and to get it translated into Persian and bring both these during his stay at the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam. The English letter read thus: "It came to my knowledge that the festivities in connection with the marriage of the Prince of high rank have been begun since a few days. We wish to associate ourselves in the function. We desire to be present in the majlis and express our joy on the event. The Governors of Bengal,¹ and Bombay and some sardārs also look forward to participate in the happy function with others. If a day could be fixed and information is sent to us, we will come."

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Colonel Barrett Bahādūr got ready the English letter along with its Persian translation and submitted these to the Nawwāb when he was present at the house of his sister. The Nawwāb went into the zenana with the letters and told his sister thus: "The Governor of Madras and other sardārs of the Council seek permission to come one day and be present in the majlis and offer congratulations on the marriage of my beloved son. They had addressed a letter to me on the subject. Now it is necessary to invite them to our house. It would be better if Colonel Barrett Bahādūr could arrange for expenses on the occasion."

Next day everything was got ready for a liberal reception of the guests, and invitations were sent to all the sardārs. The dīwān-khāna which was already furnished with adornments was further decorated with more lamps, couches and chairs. A platform covered with embroidered makhmal was put up underneath the shāmiyāna and a masnad adorned with jewels was placed on the platform for the bridegroom. Sālār Jang Bahādūr, Bahrām Jang Bahādūr and Colonel Barrett Bahādūr were entrusted with these arrangements.

On the appointed day, Nawwāb šāhib put on rich dress and ornaments set with precious stones. He wore a sword, a pēsh-qabẓ, and other arms. He carried in his hand a dhōp used by Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh Bahādūr, his father, and added lustre to the majlis by his presence. The bridegroom was conducted from the mānja-khāna to the dīwān-khāna and seated on the masnad. The Nawwāb took his seat on the couch and waited for the arrival of the sardārs. At about 9 o'clock the Governors of Bengal, Madras and Bombay with about fifty sardārs entered the majlis. They were conducted to their seats, either couch or chair, according to rank. Nawwāb ṣāhib sat on a couch along with the Governors and kept himself busy in talking with them and seeing the dance. The sardārs also enjoyed the tamasha of dance.

All the officers were attentive to the duties entrusted to them.

In the course of the conversation, Nawwāb ṣāhib mentioned the name of Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son and heir apparent, and then addressed Lord Wellesley Mornington Bahādur, Governor-General of Bengal thus: "I believe implicitly in your kindness and friendliness; you are steadfast in your friendship and perfectly straight in all your dealings. I believe that the heir apparent will attain the honour of succeeding to the hereditary throne as per the custom."

The Governor ṣāhib replied: "If such is the wish of your highness, God willing, it shall be in the same manner. I have to make a request. If certain taluks in the Carnatic could be transferred to the Company in lieu of the qisṭ payable to them according to the terms of agreement, it will give evidence of your kindness, friendship and love. If this request is fulfilled, the affairs with regard to the succession will be managed in accordance with the wishes of the powerful leader, the representative of the glorious family."

Nawwāb ṣāhib was annoyed at this improper reply and then said: "It is well known to these ṣāhibs that my father had undergone many trials before he subjugated this kingdom. He exercised authority over this territory as long as he lived. It is incumbent on me to extend my dominion from day to day with the help of such sincere and sagacious friends like you, so that it will justify the reputation of your friendship and my strenuous exertions.

"The acceptance of your request will show ignorance and lack of credibility. It is certain that this proposal is opposed to rule. It will be repugnant to the taste of intelligent and wise men as well as the rulers elsewhere."

The Governor ṣāḥib became silent as the grave at this suitable reply. Nawwāb ṣāḥib continued: "This kind of talk is not suited to this happy and joyful majlis. It is better to enjoy the dance."

The Governor replied: "All this magnificence and splendour of living are due to your highness' majestic personality. May Allāh grant you long life and prosperity."

The assembly broke up in about an hour and all the sardārs adjourned to the big room on the western side where the table was spread with every luxury. They rose from the table after about two hours, took flowers, 'itr, and pāndan and then went to see the tamasha of firework at the back of the big dīwān-khāna in the ṣaḥn of Sabz-bangla. They spent about an hour there and then took leave of the Nawwāb.

Nawwāb ṣāḥib sent the bridegroom to the mānja-khāna and himself retired to Fataḥ-chawkī. He was very much worried and made unhappy on account of the conversation he had with the Governor.

On the day of rasmi-i-sharbat Nawwāb ṣāḥib granted to the mother of Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur an elephant and two thousand rupees on his own behalf and three thousand rupees on behalf of his sisters.

Everyday Nawwāb ṣāḥib stayed from sunset till 9 o'clock in the house of his elder sister and he kept up this habit till the marriage festivities were over. He appointed Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur to supervise the arrangements for the rasm-i-sānchaq. After the observance of the rasm-i-rangbāsi in the big diwān-khāna, he set about to send the sānchaq in great splendour, accompanied by nobles, relatives and officers. The Nawwāb rode a mahādōl and shed light on the bride's house by his presence before the sānchaq party arrived there. On the day of barāt, at about 11 o'clock in the night, he brought together in Nuṣrat-maḥall Mawlānā 'Abdu'l-ʿAlī Ṣāhib, Shāh Maḥmūd Ṣāhib Sāwī, Alīmullāh Shāh Ṣāhib, Mubāriz Jang Bahādur and some venerable sayyids who were durūd-khwāns. Then he called the bridegroom and sehra was fastened to him by their auspicious hands. Then the Nawwāb helped the bridegroom to ride a horse and himself held the bridle in his hands and walked in procession as far as the big gate of his own bāgh in the midst of innumerable lamps arranged in ladder-like manner, and display of firework. When he got into a suksāwan at the big gate, Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur caught hold of the bridle and escorted the bridegroom as far as the house of the bride. The feet of the exalted Bahādur swelled a little on account of the pain caused by walking. Nawwāb ṣāhib who was pleased with this news, gave Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur an 'ināyat-nāma appointing him as the permanent ṣūbadār of Muḥammadpūr. The Bahādur was ever grateful for that.

The sisters of the Nawwāb, the bridegroom's mother and other relatives gathered at the house of the bride on the occasion of the rasm-i-jalwa and it was gone through in the presence of all. They distributed cash and jewels on the day of rūnumā'i ceremony and escorted in the afternoon the bride and bridegroom with all paraphernalia to the house of the bridegroom and observed all the ceremony pertinent to the occasion. Two or three days later the ceremony of chawthī was performed; and then the bride and bridegroom were conducted to the house of the mother of Tājul-Umarā Bahādur adjacent to Fataḥ-chawkī. Nawwāb ṣāhib was at all times pleased and delighted with his daughter-in-law. He was very affectionate towards her.

Section 2.

By the grace of Allāh, when a royal letter addressed to the Nawwāb by the Emperor of Delhi came with presents of imperial garments, the Nawwāb gave orders that the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall should be decorated with carpets, lamps, masnad, and shāmiyāna, and such other decorations that it might have the same appearance as that of the imperial darbār. He also ordered that all the amīrs and officers should be present on the appointed day at 11 o'clock in the morning in the big dīwān-khāna.

The orders of the Nawwāb were executed. All the officers, high and low, were present in the dīwān-khāna on the appointed day and hour. In accordance with instructions of the Nawwāb, Bahrām Jang Bahādur placed the royal letter on a nālkī and started from Nuṣrat-maḥall with all paraphernalia and entered the big dīwān-khāna. At that time the Nawwāb, who arrayed himself up with the imperial garments presented by the Emperor, was seated in the darbār. As soon as he heard about the arrival of the exalted farmān, a salute of twenty-one guns was fired as per orders of the Nawwāb. Then Nawwāb ṣāhib set out towards the nālkī, took out the letter, carried it on his head as far as the shāmiyāna and handed it over to Mubāriz Jang Bahādur asking him to stand with the farmān in his hands held over the masnad underneath the shāmiyāna. Then the Nawwāb made his way to ādābgāh, bowed deferentially at every step in accordance with conventional rules of making obeisance in the imperial court, came as far as the masnad, got the letter from Mubāriz Jang Bahādur and got upon the masnad with the letter placed reverently on his dastār like a kalghī. Then he handed the letter over to Raja Khūb Chand Bahādur, the mīr-munshī, and ordered him to get upon the chawkī furnished with red makhmal and read it aloud. The mīr-munshī did as he was bidden. Immediately after the reading of the letter a salute of twenty-one guns was fired. The Nawwāb received nadhīr from those present. Flowers and betel leaves were distributed and then the Nawwāb dissolved the darbār. There was a social gathering that night.

SECOND CHAPTER.

An excursion to mīnā-bāzār in Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ; feast to the sisters in the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall and Mubārak-chawkī; the receipt of a letter from Aṣaf Jāh Nizāmūl-Mulk Bahādur; the marriage of Nāṣirūd Dawla Muḥammad Ḥabībullah Khān Bahādur.

One day in accordance with the desire of his sisters, Nawwāb ṣāhib gave orders to the kotwāl of Tirmalkaṛī (Triplicane) as follows:

“A market is to be held round about Sabz-bangla, Mubārak-chawkī and the big dīwān-khāna, where jewellers must offer for sale jewels set with precious stones; traders who deal in shāl, fruit-sellers, corn-chandlers, sweetmeat vendors, and others must put on the market, goods proper to each of them to the value of about fifty thousand rupees. I wish to buy in the market and provide recreation for the ladies. Therefore you should give instructions to every one of the traders to get ready in a period of three or four days all the commodities pertaining to their trade and to depute their respective wives to sell them. It should be also notified that no male member over six months of age be permitted to enter the area. This market with chawk and bāzār should come into existence the very moment I order for it.”

The Nawwāb appointed Bahrām Jang Bahādur also to attend to this work.

The kotwāl executed the orders of the Nawwāb within the prescribed time and sent information about this to the Nawwāb through Bahrām Jang Bahādur.

Next day Nawwāb šāhib made arrangements to screen the area from the house of his elder sister as far as the big dīwān-khāna and from the houses of his two other sisters, to erect tents wherever necessary, and to post on all sides armed pahra. He invited all his three sisters, their family, other ladies and relatives to Mubārak-chawkī before sunrise. He got ten kharīṭa full of coins from a room in Mubārak-chawkī and distributed thus: elder sister, 2,000 rupees, the other two sisters 1,000 rupees each, their daughters and daughters-in-law 200 rupees each, ladies of rank belonging to their family 100 rupees each, some slave-girls from 20 rupees to 5 rupees each; the nephews 200 rupees each, ṭablūrṇī and such others 2 rupees each.

Then he told them thus: "Each of you should go to the shops and buy what is best in your view. Grains and other necessary things for the morning and evening meals also should be purchased from the shops. You may buy and eat whatever you like."

He gave thirty hūn to his sisters asking them to arrange for his meals.

In obedience to the order of the Nawwāb all went about to make purchases. They bought provisions for cooking food, besides jewels and clothes which they took a fancy to. Then they cooked their food. Thus they spent the time from morning till evening. Goods to the value of nearly 40,000 rupees were sold on that day. The Nawwāb had his afternoon dinner with his sisters in the big dīwān-khāna. Then he gave the ladies leave to depart and removed the arrangements for the zenana.

The Nawwāb asked Bahrām Jang Bahādur to find out from the kotwāl the quantity of goods that were sold out and the quantity left unsold in all the shops. Next morning Bahrām Jang Bahādur turned his attention to this; he appointed two or three mutaṣaddīs of the sarkār to go round with the kotwāl and take stock. After stock-taking it was ascertained that some jewels, shāls worth about seven thousand rupees, a small quantity of grains, sweetmeats and such other things alone were left unsold. When this report was sent to the Nawwāb he gave orders that jewels and shāls be bought for the sarkār and the same be entrusted with Muḥammad Ma'sūm; that the price for other commodities also be paid by the sarkār. Then he gave orders to remove the shops from the bāgh by the evening. Bahrām Jang Bahādur executed the orders of the Nawwāb and the shops were removed.

Section 1.

On the 14th of the month Nawwāb ṣāhib gave orders that arrangements should be made for the zenana from the dīvān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall and Mubārak-chawkī as far as the houses of his two sisters, for the purpose of seeing the full moon on the sea-shore. He gathered together at about 5 o'clock all the ladies in the big dīvān-khāna and had his evening meal at Mubārak-chawkī with his sisters and their children. Then he got up the terrace of the Sabz-bangla with his sisters and waited for the rising of the full moon. He also invited the widows of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh to that place and received them with great respect. Then he presented humbly Nawwāb Ra'īsu'n-nisā Bēgam and Nawwāb Zēbu'n-nisā Bēgam, the mother of Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān Bahādur, and Sarfarāz Khān Bahādur each with 500 rupees; he presented his three sisters with 500 rupees each, and also gave presents to their dependents according to rank. After fruits and other things were distributed, he bade them all farewell at about 10 o'clock and removed the arrangements for the zenana. Then Nawwāb ṣāhib returned to Fataḥ-chawkī.

Section 2.

Nawwāb Āṣaf Jāh Niẓāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur addressed an
'ināyat-nāma to Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, congratulating him on the marriage of Tājul-Umarā Bahādur, his son, and sent it to Madras with presents of khilāt and jawāhir through Sa'īdu'd-Dawla Bahādur, the Āṣaf-jāhī vakīl. When the news of the arrival to Madras of the 'ināyat-nāma reached Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, he gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur that he should arrange to decorate the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall and instruct all the officers to be present there at 11 o'clock on the day of the arrival of Sa'īdu'd-Dawla Bahādur.

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, all the officers and servants were present in the darbār at the appointed time. The Āṣaf-jāhī vakīl was given a warm welcome and the 'ināyat-nāma and khilāt were received with high respect. The mīr-munshī was asked to read the 'ināyat-nāma and the Nawwāb rejoiced to hear the contents. He presented the vakīl with a sarpēch set with precious stones, an expensive scarlet dushālā, pāndān, gulāb-pāshī and itr-dān, and bade him farewell.

Section 3.

One day in the month of Dhu'l-ḥajj, 1213 A.H. Nawwāb ṣāhib paid a visit to his second sister to inquire how she was after she took the laxative. The Nawwāb's other sisters also went with him. In the course of the conversation, reference to the matrimonial alliance of Nāṣiru'd-Dawla Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh Khān Bahādur, son of Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur, was made. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam said: "It will be very commendable to fix up the marriage of Nāṣiru'd-Dawla with the daughter of Ghulām Jilānī Khān. 'Umdatun-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba, the mother of Nāṣiru'd-Dawla submitted, "If this is the decision of the elders, I will conform to it." Immediately Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba communicated the decision to Bachnūbī, who belonged to the nobility of Gōpanaw and was the mother-in-law of Ghulām Jilānī Khān, through Fāṭima Bēgam, the daughter of Najībullāh Khān. Bachnūbī sent the following reply: "I have no concern with this affair. Ghulām Jilānī Khān, the father of the bride, has interest in this." Then Fāṭima Bēgam invited Ghulām Jilānī Khān to the house of his mother-in-law and communicated the news of the proposed matrimonial alliance.

The Khān was reduced to perplexity and replied: "I have not got a daughter deserving to be of this relationship. How can poor people like me aspire for a matrimonial alliance with amīrs." When Fāṭima Bēgam heard these plain words, she returned to Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, and communicated to her the reply she received from Bachnūbī and Ghulām Jilānī Khān.

At that time Nāṣīru'd-Dawla became impulsive, as young men are, and importuned Nawwāb ṣāḥib, his uncle, thus: "My dear uncle, at any cost my marriage alliance should be fixed up with that family only. It should be settled this very day." The Nawwāb was moved to laughter and then he asked his sisters: "Why does Ghulām Jilānī object to this alliance?" The sisters submitted, "There seems to be no other reason except his own malignancy. They are vain people. Well, we will fix up the marriage with some other family."

Nawwāb ṣāḥib said to them, "There should not be malignancy to the ruler. You may all remember how his father behaved badly towards Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur, my father, when he proposed the marriages of my brothers, Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur and Naṣīru'l-Mulk Bahādur, with the sisters of this Ghulām Jilānī Khān. But his father was treated with indignity and put in prison in the taluk of Nellore; then only he gave his consent to the proposed matrimonial alliance. Ghulām Jilānī is his son; perhaps he will also give his consent after undergoing the experiences of his father." Then continued Nawwāb šāhib, "By any means this matter should be settled today. The rasm-i-ḥqd must be performed and other ceremonies pertaining to marriage also should be gone through in the course of this Dhu'l-ḥajj month."

Then he called at once Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and conveyed through them the following message to Ghulām Jilānī Khān. "Today is an auspicious day. I wish to settle the marriage of Nāşirū'd-Dawla Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh Khān Bahādur, my nephew, with your eldest daughter. It is desirable that the ceremony of ḥqd is gone through today, and the marriage also may be celebrated this very month; for, in a week it will be the sacred month of Muḥarram."¹

Ghulām Jilānī Khān was very much agitated and troubled at this imperious message of the Nawwāb. Then he sent the following reply: "It may be presumptuous on the part of this humble slave if he ventures upon a reply instead of giving a tacit consent to the proposal. I submit that you are a lord of bounty, a beneficent master, a ra'īs, and an absolute ruler. But this slave is one of those slaves and despicable men who hang about your generous door-steps. Alliance with slaves is no good alliance. Therefore this slave had not the courage to accept the proposal."

The two Bahādurs conveyed the reply of Ghulām Jilānī Khān to Nawwāb šāhib.

(1) Muḥarram lit. "That which is forbidden"; anything sacred. It is the first month in the Muslim calendar. The first ten days of this month are observed in commemoration of the martyrdom of Ḥusayn, the second son of Fāṭima, the Prophet's daughter. The ceremonies of the Muḥarram differ much in different places and countries.

The Nawwāb spoke furiously thus :

“Ghulām Jilānī Khān also wants to undergo the same unpleasant experience as his father did when the marriage of his daughters was proposed. His father was put in fetters and kept under restraint. God willing, today the engagement will be decided upon by any means, irrespective of Ghulām Jilānī Khān’s wishes.”

The Nawwāb called Muḥammad Ibrāhīm the risāladār, gave him 5 hūn from his own pocket, and said : “Get ready at once a tray of khilāt, four trays full of sugar candy, dates, betel, flowers and other necessary things for marriage and another tray of iron fetters.”

The risāladār immediately got ready the things and brought them before the Nawwāb, who sent them to the house of his second sister for the inspection of all his sisters.

Then he sent for the trays and kept them with himself. He told Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur thus : “Both of you go again to Ghulām Jilānī Khān, apprise him of my anger and frighten him into submission by saying as follows : “Your objection and obstinacy in this affair will be of no avail. Your father also put forth meaningless objections when Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh Bahādur proposed the marriage of my brothers with your sisters. But his impudence was of little avail. It is necessary that he should recall the past to his mind and not deviate from the path of obedience. He must agree to the proposal and give satisfaction to me. The consequence of this will reveal itself in future.”

The Bahādurs went again to the house of Ghulām Jilānī Khān and informed him about the views of the Nawwāb. As the Khān was already informed that fetters had been got ready, he had to get over his rebellious mood and he gave his consent to the proposal with certain conditions. They were :

(1) "Your highness may be pleased to shed lustre on the house of this poor man by your presence and then the matter can be fixed up in your presence.

(2) "‘Umdatul-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā, the mother of the bridegroom, should pay a visit to the house of this humble slave on the day of jahva and raise me in the estimation of others.

(3) "This servant must be granted an allowance of five hundred rupees every month.

(4) "If the status of this humble servant be raised by conferring upon him the titles Bahādur and Jang, it will not be incongruous with your highness' favour."

The Bahādurs represented to the Nawwāb that Ghulām Jilānī Khān had acquiesced in the proposal on certain conditions. As soon as the Nawwāb heard that Ghulām Jilānī Khān had agreed to the marriage proposal, he asked the risāladār to take away the iron chains. He consented to fulfil the conditions of Ghulām Jilānī Khān and also sent information of this fact to his sisters. Then out of regard for the feelings of his own nephew and the recommendations of Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, the Nawwāb started that very moment with Bahrām Jang Bahādur and others, to visit Ghulām Jilānī Khān. He gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur thus:

"Let Ghulām Jilānī Khān be honoured with the title Ikhtiyār Jang Bahādur, and be given an allowance of five hundred rupees every month."

In accordance with the order of the Nawwāb, Bahrām Jang Bahādur took steps to carry out the formalities of the law and the Khān was honoured with the title and a monthly allowance.

Ghulām Jilānī Khān submitted twenty-one rupees as nadhr to the Nawwāb and kissed his feet. The Nawwāb raised him from his feet, and said: "Be at ease; the bridegroom's mother will go over to your house on the day of jalwa and take the bride in her company."

Then the Nawwāb commanded the risāladār thus: "Bring here at once the four trays of sugar candy, flowers, and other things, from the house of my second sister with music of nawbat." The risāladār returned in about an hour with all the things.

The Nawwāb told Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur as follows: "You are an 'ālim read under Mawlānā Abdu'l-Alī ṣāhib. You can conduct the marriage ceremony of the daughter of Ghulām Jilānī Khān Ikhtiyār Jang Bahādur, with Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh Khān Nāṣiru'd-Dawla Bahādur, the son of Muḥammad Nāṣir Khān Bahādur. Bahrām Jang will be the vakil for Muḥammad Ḥabībullāh."

The marriage ceremony was thus gone through about an hour before sunset, and those present addressed one another with expressions of joy. Nawwāb ṣāhib put Ghulām Jilānī Khān Ikhtiyār Jang Bahādur at his ease, and also communicated his joy to Jilānī Khān's wife with the following news: "Three thousand rupees will be sent to you today through my senior sister for the expenses of marriage. It is necessary to begin marriage celebrations from tomorrow and finish them early; for, the holy Muḥarram is fast approaching."

Then the Nawwāb left that place and went to the house of his second sister and congratulated them all. He called aside Nāṣiru'd-Dawla and hugged him with affection. He sent for eight thousand rupees from the treasury and sent three thousand rupees to Ghulām Jilānī Khān, on behalf of his senior sister, through Muḥammad Ibrāhīm the risāladār, with instructions that everything should be got ready for the marriage and the celebration finished in the month of Dhū'l-ḥajj. He gave five thousand rupees to his younger sister with directions that arrangements be made as quickly as possible and in such a manner that the rasm of charvthī be finished by the afternoon of the 29th of Dhu'l-hajj, and the bride be sent to her father's house before the crescent moon was sighted.

In accordance with the orders of the Nawwāb, Ghulām Jilānī Khān made everything ready, and on the 22nd of Dhu'l-hajj commenced the marriage celebrations which were brought to an end as desired by the Nawwāb.

During these celebrations the Nawwāb shed lustre on the happy majlis twice by his presence. He visited the mānja-khāna of the bridegroom on the day of the rasm of sānchaq at the time of rang-bāzī, when a drop of coloured water fell on his nīm-āstīn of white shāl. Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur offered to wipe that off with his own robe. Immediately Nawwāb ṣāhib doffed his nīm-āstīn along with contents of the pockets: gaṛiyāl, ganj, muhr-i-jēbī, about one hundred hūn, and made a present of the nīm-āstīn to Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur. The Bahādur paid his obeisance for these gifts, put on the nīm-āstīn and paid nadhīr to the Nawwāb. Next day the Nawwāb asked Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur to return the muhr-i-jēbī and keep the rest of the articles found in the pockets of nīm-āstīn. The Bahādur returned the muhr on which was inscribed the naqsh-i-buddūh.

On the eve of shab-gasht Nawwāb ṣāhib visited the house of his younger sister to inspect the arrangements in charge of Muḥammad Kifāyatullāh, an old servant of the sarkār, whose ancestors had served from the days of Nawwāb Anwaru'd-Dīn Khān Shahīd. He was in the service of Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and was appointed to assist Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur in this marriage. Muḥammad Kifāyatullāh managed everything with great economy and prudence, which pleased Nawwāb ṣāhib very much. He invited Muḥammad Kifāyatullāh to the mānja-khāna and conferred on him the title Najābat-Ālī Khān Bahādur and took nadhīr from him.

When everything was made ready for shab-gasht, sehra was fastened to the bridegroom, in the presence of Nawwāb ṣāḥib, by Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur. The Nawwāb took the bridegroom in his company, went to the zenana, where the rasm of sharbat-nōshī was gone through. Then he came out with the bridegroom, made him sit on horse-back and sent him away. On the morning of jakwa, Nawwāb 'Umdat'u'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba, the mother of the bridegroom, rode in a mahādōl along with her sisters' daughters, and went to the house of Ghulām Jilānī Khān l^hhtiyār Jang Bahādur. At that time Nawwāb ṣāḥib also shed light on this house by his presence and returned to his happy residence after the completion of the ceremony.

'Umdat'u'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba performed the rasm of rūnumā'ī and salāmī, and conducted the bride to her residence in a separate carriage in the company of Malik'u'n-nisā Bēgam's daughter, her own niece and daughter-in-law. The two sisters of 'Umdat'u'n-nisā Bēgam who were present at her house for the marriage, gave presents to the bride on the occasion of rūnumā'ī. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba presented the bride with a chānd sīsphūl set with precious stones, and Nawwāb Malik'u'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba with a bāzū-band adorned with jewels. The bride and bridegroom were sent to the bride's house on the 29th of Dhu'l-ḥajj where the ceremony of chawthī was gone through. Then 'Umdat'u'n-nisā Bēgam led them back to her own house, and sent away the bride alone to her father's house in the afternoon on that day. She conducted the bride to her own house on the 15th of Muḥarram.

THIRD CHAPTER.

The trip to the vine-yard, and the sea-shore; the dispatch of an urīza along with presents to the English King requesting him to recognise the claims of Tājūl-Umarā Bahādur, his son, to succeed to the throne after him; the sending away of the coffin of the late Nawwāb Muḥammad Alī Wālājāh Bahādur to Nattharnagar.

During the spring when the vine-yard yields good grapes, Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur arranged, in accordance with the desire of his sisters, to make everything ready for an excursion to the vine-arbour. One morning he made arrangements for purdah from the houses of his sisters as far as Nuṣrat-maḥall, Fataḥ-chawkī, and the courtyard where a pulley was fixed to draw sweet water contiguous to the vine-arbour. Then tents were pitched in the secluded area. He invited all the sisters and their dependants. The Nawwāb enjoyed himself. The sisters were much enlivened; they plucked fruits which were collected and distributed along with other kinds of fruits after the royal repast. The excursion lasted till noon. Nawwāb ṣāhib presented every one with cash ranging from a rupee to five ashrafī, gave them all leave to depart and himself returned to Fataḥ-chawkī.

Section 1.

During the summer Nawwāb ṣāhib gave Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur one thousand rupees to get ready a thatched house on the sea-shore opposite to the sea gate contiguous to the house of his younger sister, in order that it might be useful on occasions of excursions to the sea. He was instructed to form plans for a lofty building with straw-covered roof, floor paved with bricks, walls painted in rose-coloured lime, rooms devised in a manner pretty to look at, extensive courtyards, and compound enclosed with bamboo tatty fitted in an elegant style. He was also to arrange to furnish the house with carpets got from farrāsh-khāna and lights from tablūr-khāna.

In obedience to the order, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur got ready such a building and communicated the news of its completion to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāhib and his sisters with their dependants visited that house every day at 11 A.M.; he took his afternoon dinner there with them all and then distributed fruits and presents. He stayed there till 8 o'clock in the night and then returned. This practice was continued for twenty days.

In the course of his trips to this new building every day, he was planning to send a letter to the English King in regard to the claims of Tāju'l-Umarā, his son, to succeed to the throne after him and was collecting a number of presents for the English King. He always consulted with Colonel Barrett Bahādur in this affair whether it might be sent to the English King (George III) through the exalted Prince (later on, George IV) the agent (Regent) to his majesty the English King.

When the Nawwāb had finished his collection of presents, he brought these to Fataḥ-chawkī. One evening he sat in the thatched house and invited Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur and a few other ministers to his presence. He sent for the boxes that contained all the articles collected at Fataḥ-chawkī; a pair of horses of good breed from the royal stable with trappings, and saddles fitted with makhmal and embroidery. He got ready a golden nalka for the letters. Among the gifts there were some set with precious stones and unbored pearls. These were packed in small boxes in the presence of a vakil, one of the English sardārs. The trappings were packed in big boxes. All these were locked, wrapped in wax-cloth and sealed. The Nawwāb went with the boxes containing precious gifts and letters as far as the boat, entrusted them to the vakil, while other boxes of gifts and horses were shipped in his presence. At the time of getting into the suksāwan, Nawwāb ṣāhib spoke thus to the officers: "This is a matter connected with long distance. It is not known whether the treacherous time will practise deceit. Allāh is the Preserver and Protector of all." Then he took leave of the officers and others and returned to his palace.

Section 2.

The Nawwāb made everything ready for sending the coffin of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur, his noble father, to Nattharnagar. On the morning of Thursday, the 3rd of Rabī'uth-thānī, 1213 A.H., the Nawwāb went to the house of Shāh Maḥmūd ṣāhib Sāwī with the officers and got ready all the retinue. He gave orders to Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, and Ḥajī Ḥāfiẓ Maghribī ṣāhib, thus: "Get the respectable coffin out of the tomb, bring it to the courtyard of the mosque and then send word to me. I shall be present when it is sent off to Nattharnagar."

In obedience to the order of the Nawwāb, Bahrām Jang Bahādur and others brought the coffin out of the tomb, filled the pit with wheat and dried flowers that were there and levelled it. They opened the coffin, perfumed it with ʿitr and other rich perfume, and rose water and closed it. They brought it to the courtyard of the mosque, and communicated the news to the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb went to the mosque. As soon as he saw the coffin, sorrowful tears trickled down his cheeks. He adorned the coffin with a cloth woven with golden threads, covered it with flowers, and placed it under a canopy supported on silver pillars. Then he sent the coffin in great state to the mosque in Sayyidābād, (Saidapet) followed by all nobles, shaykhs, ḥāfiẓs, durūd-khwāns of the sarkār as well as those in the employ of the daughters and widows of the late Nawwāb, and a large crowd. He also gave instructions thus:

"Keep the coffin in the mosque of Sayyidābād for two days till other arrangements are made ready for the journey, and the mansils are fixed. I shall go over there day after tomorrow about the time of afternoon-prayer and then send it."

Then the Nawwāb left that place, and visited the newly-built house of Mubārīz Jang Bahādur facing the sea and contiguous to the house of Shāh Maḥmūd ṣāḥib Sāwī. About 9 o'clock in the night the Nawwāb gave orders to lay the table and sent for trays of food brought from the houses of Shāh Maḥmūd ṣāḥib Sāwī, and Mubārīz Jang Bahādur. He had his dinner in the company of his nephews and some trustworthy companions and returned to Fataḥ-chawkī. He wrote from this place a ḥukm-nāma, with details in a list, in regard to the dispatch of the coffin, in the name of Bahrām Jang Bahādur. The list contained names of halting places en route, instructions to establish rest-houses at every stage for the comfort of travellers, and orders for the grant of four kāni of land as inām to every one of the rest-houses in these halting places. Next day he called Bahrām Jang Bahādur, gave him the list and a few thousands of rupees for expenses on the way and instructed him thus:

"Get two or three tents from the farrāsh-khāna, put the load on elephants and send them to Sayyidābād. The tents will be useful in the stages. Go to the mosque in Sayyidābād early in the morning and make everything ready for the journey. I shall go over there in the afternoon after dinner, and dispatch the coffin."

Bahrām Jang Bahādur carried out the instructions of the Nawwāb and reached Sayyidābād. Nawwāb ṣāḥib arrived at that place at the time of afternoon-prayer and dispatched the coffin to its destination. Bahrām Jang Bahādur was directed by the Nawwāb to pass along every mansil as per programme and to summon the troops of the English and the sarkār when the coffin reached the limits of Nattharnagar and then enter the fort gate followed by a large army. The Bahādur took leave of the Nawwāb and started on his journey.

During that period Naṣīru'l-Mulk Bahādur was at Nattharnagar. As the news of the departure of Bahrām Jang Bahādur with the coffin was already communicated to Naṣīrū'l-Mulk Bahādur, he went out of the fort with all shaykhs, 'ulamā, and fuzalā on the day of the arrival of the coffin and followed it as far as the entrance to the shrine of Ḥaṣrat Nattharwalī ṣāhib and made arrangements for the burial to the right of the holy shrine, with the assistance of shaykhs and 'ulamā. He made elaborate arrangements for fātiḥa on the 3rd, 10th, 20th, and 40th days after burial, and for the distribution of charities. Lighting arrangements were excellent on these occasions.

After the fātiḥa on the 40th day, Bahrām Jang Bahādur made all arrangements at the place as per instructions of the Nawwāb and returned to Madras. He appeared before the Nawwāb, and gave a continuous account of his journey to Nattharnagar and the burial of the coffin of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur. His dexterity and good will pleased the Nawwāb who presented him with a white shāl and a rāmāl from his own wardrobe.

FOURTH CHAPTEP.

General Harris Bahādur pays a visit to the Nawwāb; Mīr 'Alam Bahādur and his son seek an interview with the Nawwāb through General Harris Bahādur.

After the subjugation of the fort of Seringapatan and the death of Tippū Sultān Shāhīd, the successor to the Bahādur well-known as Ḥaydar Naik, General Harris Bahādur¹ reached Madras and had an interview with Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā

(1) Lieut.-General George Harris succeeded Clarke in March, 1797, as Commander-in-chief of Madras. On the 21st February, 1798, he became provisional Governor and held that office until the arrival of Lord Clive in August, 1798. General Harris commanded the Madras army at Vellore in February 1799, against Tippū Sultān. The English army were joined by the Niṣām's army commanded by Mīr 'Alam. On the 5th April, the allied forces appeared before Seringapatan, drove in the enemy's outposts, and began the siege. A month later, on the 4th May, the assault was delivered by General David Baird, and the fortified city was carried by storm with great slaughter of the defenders. Tippū Sultān shot through the head, was found amid a heap of slain. The standards of Mysore were brought to Fort St. George Bahādur after obtaining permission to meet him at 11 A.M., on the 14th of Şafar 1214 A.H. The interview took place in the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall. General Harris jubilantly gave him a continuous account of the battle, the subjugation of the fort of Seringapatan, his own exertions, and attempts to master the enemy, and the endeavours of other frang sardārs. He also revealed the feelings of Mīr Ālam Bahādur to gain distinction by meeting the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb observed: "Success and victory for friends are equivalent to our success and victory which provide an occasion for our rejoicing. May Allāh, exalted be He, make this victory agreeable to you and all our friends." Then he took out ten hun-kurk from his pocket, and gave it to Bahrām Jang Bahādur directing him to purchase immediately sugar for that amount and distribute it. With regard to the meeting of Mīr Ālam Bahādur, Nawwāb ṣāhib said: "I shall meet Mīr Ālam after five or six days. I learn that he is affected with leprosy. I wish to meet him by the side of staircase to avoid giving him trouble. I shall send word to him two days before the date of meeting."

The Nawwāb presented General Harris with pāndān, ʿitr-dān, gulāb-pāsh and bade him farewell. Then the Nawwāb spoke as follows to Bahrām Jang Bahādur with a tear-stained face: "It is a pity, a thousand pities, that a powerful Muslim ruler, a source of strength and power to the followers of the religion of Muḥammad, (peace be on him) has departed from this impermanent world to the everlasting abode. 'Verily we are for Allāh and to Allāh we return.' The ten hun-kurk I gave you in the presence of General Harris for the purpose of purchasing and distributing sugar, was to show ostensibly my joy. But my real intention was that the amount should be by Lieut. Harris of the 74th Regiment, son of the Commander-in-Chief, and presented with great ceremony to the Governor-General.

See Henry Davison Love.—Vestiges of Old Madras, Vol. III, pp. 458-461.

distributed to faqīrs and miskīns in the name of that Sulṭān Shahīd for the benefit of his soul¹."

Section 1.

A few days after General Harris' interview with the Nawwāb, Mīr 'Ālam² was asked to meet him. The dīwān-khāna of Kalas-maḥall was furnished with carpets, lamps, and shāmi-yāna. All the nobles and officers were instructed to put on white and clean robes and be present at the dīwān-khāna on Saturday, the 23rd of Ṣafar, 1214 A.H. The retinue also was ordered to be ready at the dārul-amāra. At about 7 o'clock on the appointed day, the Nawwāb arrayed himself in rich robes, came out with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur and other nephews, and all nobles, and spoke thus to Mubārīz Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur :

"Owing to the kindness and favour of A'zamūl-Umarā Mushīru'l-Mulk Bahādur and the endeavour and encouragement of Ḥashmat Jang Bahādur, the Resident³ at Ḥaydarābād, Mīr

(1) See appendix C for the chronogram which gives the date of Tippū Sulṭān's death.

(2) Mīr 'Ālam (Sayyid Abū'l-Qāsim) represented the Nizām's government at Calcutta in 1786 A.D. When Aristoḡāh A'zamūl-Umarā, the minister of Nizām 'Alī Khān was taken prisoner by the Mahrattas, Mīr 'Ālam acted as minister. He supported the cause of the East India Company against Tippū Sulṭān in Mysore between the years 1791 and 1799, and was present when Seringapatan was taken by the English. After a temporary eclipse Mīr 'Ālam succeeded Aristoḡāh as minister in 1804 and held that office till his death in 1808. He constructed the well-known lake, named after him, at Ḥaydarābād.

(3) Colonel James Kirkpatrick was the British Resident during the reign of Nawwāb Nizām 'Alī Khān Bahādur (1761-1803). During the eight years (1797-1805) Colonel Kirkpatrick occupied the position of the Resident in Ḥaydarābād, he was very friendly with the Nizām of Ḥaydarābād and his Prime Minister named Aristoḡāh A'zamūl-Umarā. Major Kirkpatrick lived in oriental magnificence. The Nizām bestowed on him the title Ḥashmat Jang (magnificent in battle). He married a Muslim girl known as Khayrūn-nisā Bēgam (excellent among women). His marriage with Khayrūn-nisā Bēgam forms an interesting episode in the story of Anglo-Indian romance. Of this union were born two children, a son and a daughter. It was arranged with the mother's consent that the two children aged four and three years should go to England to be brought up there. They found an English home in the house of their paternal grandfather and afterwards with one of their cousins. They were, however, destined never to see their parents again, for a little later

Ālam attained high rank and supreme manṣab in the darbār of Aṣaf Jāh. He was appointed farwjdār to render assistance to the English troops at Seringapatan. He became victorious and is now on his way back to Ḥaydarābād. He expressed his desire through the Governor to meet me. He may have in view the customs prevalent in the Āṣaf Jāhī darbār. Perhaps he may not know the customary dignity pertaining to this darbār. By the grace of Allāh, exalted be He, glory be to Him, and by means of the favours of Shūh Ālam Bahādur Pādshāh Ghāzī, the Emperor at Delhi, this government also ranks among other governments. This is a powerful state, for we are distinguished from others by the manṣab, i.e., wisārat-i-ṣūbadār of the ṣūba of the Carnatic. Therefore when Ḥamīdu'd-Dawla and Hādiu'd-Dawla reached Madras from Ḥaydarābād, during the reign of Muḥammad Āli Wālājāh Bahādur, he kept in view his own rank and rendered to them civilities at the meeting according to their rank. There is no indication in what way Mīr Ālam intends to meet me. But he is afflicted with leprosy and this offers an excuse for meeting him by the side of the staircase."

Mubārīz Jang Bahādur and others submitted: "Your highness' idea is exceedingly nice."

The Nawwāb gave orders to put a couch of green makhmal for himself and three chairs opposite to the couch in pēsh-dālān verging on the edge of the carpet for his beloved son and others, ten chairs and another one for Colonel Barrett Bahādur behind the couch.

Major Kirkpatrick died in Calcutta (1805) and his Muslim widow returned and stayed at Ḥaydarābād. The name Ṣāhib Bēgam Bibī Ṣāhibā (our little princess and English lady), which her Indian mother had given her daughter, was changed into Catherine Aurora (better known as Kitty). She died at the age of 87 and left many children, while her brother died young leaving a widow with three children.

Kitty was the most fascinating of women and she has been enshrined in English literature. "She is the Kitty Kirkpatrick of Carlyle's 'Reminiscences' and the 'Blumine' of his Sartor Resartus." The famous Scott describes her in one place as "a half Begam: a semi-Oriental Englishwoman."

They arranged seats as per instructions and awaited the arrival of MĪr 'Ālam Bahādur. At about 9 o'clock the trooper brought the news that the conveyance of MĪr 'Ālam had entered Bāgh-i-khāss. Meanwhile, the conveyance arrived and it was followed by his retinue composed of retainers, bāndārs, chōbdārs, armed jawāns, najīb-troops, numbering about one hundred men. The retinue were left outside the gate of the dīwān-khāna of Kalas-mahall. Only two suksāwans occupied by MĪr 'Ālam and MĪr Dawrān, his son, reached in front of the dālān of the big dīwān-khāna followed by his select companions, servants, chōbdārs and bāndārs. At the request of the Nawwāb, the suksāwan of MĪr 'Ālam was brought as far as the edge of the staircase near his own couch. When MĪr 'Ālam got down from his suksāwan, the Nawwāb rose, caught hold of the hand of the Bahādur, and conducted him up the stairs. MĪr 'Ālam observed all the formalities at the time of meeting the Nawwāb, who also embraced him after the oriental fashion, and requested him to take his seat. Then MĪr 'Ālam presented MĪr Dawrān, his son, to the Nawwāb. MĪr Dawrān submitted a nadhr of five muhr and thus took a pride in meeting the Nawwāb. MĪr 'Ālam sat on a couch near the Nawwāb, while MĪr Dawrān was seated on a chair. Then MĪr 'Ālam introduced some of his own companions to the Nawwāb, intimating to him the manṣabs held by each one of them. They all submitted nadhr to the Nawwāb. Among the companions of MĪr 'Ālam there was one who had the title Bahrām Jang. After the formal presentation of this companion of MĪr 'Ālam, Nawwāb ṣāhib was silent for a while and then called Qādir Nawāz Khān Bahādur by his title Bahrām Jang Bahādur on the pretext of giving orders, but in reality to indicate that title to MĪr 'Ālam. Immediately Bahrām Jang, the companion of MĪr 'Ālam, thought that he was wanted by Nawwāb ṣāhib and got up from his seat. The Nawwāb remarked: "I called my own Bahrām Jang Bahādur." MĪr 'Ālam smiled at this and also Nawwāb ṣāhib, who observed thus to Mīr Ālam Bahādur. "This Qādir Nawāz Khān, in my government also, is virtuous, intelligent, learned, affable and good-natured, and the title Bahrām Jang is conferred upon him." Bahrām Jang paid his obeisance to the Nawwāb. Mīr Ālam submitted: "I have heard of the praiseworthy qualities and good disposition of this person, for everyone is loud in his praises."

Then Nawwāb ṣāhib inquired about the war, the subjugation of the fort of Seringapatan, and other facts about Ḥaydarābād and spent about an hour in conversation on these topics. At the time of leave-taking the Nawwāb presented Mīr Ālam with some trays: one set contained dushāla and khilāt, and another jawāhirāt. There were also other gifts like garīyāl, and ganj set with jewels, mandīla, and a suksāwan made in England with the decorative design of a lion's mouth.

Three suksāwans were got from England during the time of Nawwāb Muḥammad Āli Wālājāh Bahādur. Of these, one was presented by Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur to Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and another to Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur. The Nawwāb got back the suksāwan of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and presented it to Mīr Ālam Bahādur.

Then the Nawwāb conferred dignity on Mīr Ālam Bahādur by offering to him 'itrdān, pāndān, gulāb and flowers personally and bade him farewell. The Nawwāb sent to Mīr Ālam Bahādur in the afternoon fifty trays containing various dishes of food.

A week later Nawwāb ṣāhib sent information of his return visit to Mīr Ālam Bahādur. The Nawwāb started on the appointed day with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, and other nephews and some of the nobles. The Nawwāb was dressed out thus: a jāma of white shāl, a rūmāl tied to the dastār, a Guzarati qamar-band and a dagger with an embroidered handle stuck in it, a mandīla round his waist, an ūl-band of pea-green colour around the neck, and a sword, the hilt of which was set with precious stones. Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and others who accompanied the Nawwāb put on rich dress as per instructions and joined the Nawwāb. He sent in advance armed jawāns, servants and Abyssinians. He drove a chārat drawn by twelve horses, with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, and Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, while his other nephews and some of the nobles drove in two chārats. They were followed by four female camels, fifty troopers, and a number of pipers and standard-bearers. They all went to the camp of Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur. As soon as the conveyance of the Nawwāb reached the camping ground, Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur descended from the upper storey and received the Nawwāb at the foot of the staircase. He took hold of the Nawwāb's hand, and conducted him to the upper storey furnished with carpets and chairs. The Nawwāb stayed there for about an hour. At the time of leave-taking Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur offered to the Nawwāb 'itr, pān and gulāb personally, while Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur and other nephews of the Nawwāb were treated to pān, 'itr and gulāb by Mīr Dawrān in person, and the nobles by Bahrām Jang, the companion of Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur. Then Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur accompanied the Nawwāb and his party when they descended from the upper storey and bade them farewell.

When Mīr 'Ālam Bahādur started back to Haydarābād after some days, the Nawwāb sent him some trays containing food, and provisions for the journey.

PART IV.

FIRST CHAPTER.

Miscellaneous incidents in the reign of the Nawwāb; trips to the Pulimādavaram tank, Maḥbūb-bāgh belonging to Iftikhārūd-Dawla Bahādur, and Frangikonda and its hill; the illness of Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur; the arrival of Nawwāb Ḥusām-ul-Mulk Bahādur from Nattharnagar to inquire after him.

Every year on the 6th of the holy Muḥarram, Nawwāb ṣāhib changed his usual dress and put on green garments. He tied langar-i-mannat round his loins in the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā. Then in the afternoon he started from there with Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and some other servants followed by his own retinue and a crowd of faqīrs to the house opposite to the big gate in Bāgh-i-kalān where the banner of 'Alī was installed with great ceremony on the night of the first of Muḥarram and kept on flying till the tenth of that month. During the night the Nawwāb made arrangements for the passage of the zenana to the place where the banner of 'Alī was installed and went with Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā and some of his own ladies. He kept the langar there and paid nadhṛ. On the following days Nawwāb ṣāhib went there sometimes with ladies and sometimes with officers. He paid nadhṛ and said fātiḥa.

Section 1.

Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhibā, after obtaining permission from the Nawwāb, arranged to decorate the diwān-khāna of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur and kept it ready for the birthday celebrations of the Nawwāb from the 20th to the 24th of the holy Muḥarram. She distributed trays containing various dishes of food and special khilat to nearest relatives and officers like Bahrām Jang Bahādur through her servants. At 11 A.M. on the 25th of Muḥarram the rasm of rang was gone through; in the afternoon she weighed the Nawwāb in the zenana. Then in the evening she got up a festive majlis to celebrate the event.

On the occasion of the birthday celebrations of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wāljāh Bahādur, it was the custom to fire a salute of guns in proportion to the age of the Nawwāb. But Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur dropped this custom because his senior sister prevented him from observing it, as unpropitious, a salute of guns in proportion to the number of years completed being usually fired for the dead. Instead of that he ordered that a salute of 21 guns be fired in the morning before the ceremony and another salute of 21 guns in the evening after the completion of the ceremony.

On his birthday, at 8 o'clock in the morning, the Nawwāb ordered for one hundred trays containing various dishes of food to be brought to Nuṣrat-maḥall, invited his nephews, nobles and nearest relatives and entertained them in his presence. After the ceremony was gone through, he took nadhīr in the zenana from his brothers and sisters; sometimes he received nadhīr from a few at Fataḥ-chawkī, and sometimes in the green-chair room. He permitted some to submit the nadhīr to Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and some to pay it at the house of his senior sister.

Section 2.

Bahrām Jang Bahādur dispatched, as usual, on the 7th of Safar, tents, carpets and such other things, culinary articles, men connected with each work and guards to the dargāh of Pīr Pahlawān ṣāhib. He went there in person on the 8th of that month, arranged to pitch tents on the sea-coast, decorate the place, and get ready provisions, and then communicated the news to Nawwāb šāhib. The Nawwāb started to that place with his sons, nephews and trustworthy servants at 6 o'clock in the morning of the 10th. Bahrām Jang Bahādur made everything ready for the breakfast in the big tent and awaited the arrival of the royal party. The Nawwāb arrived at 7 o'clock and had breakfast with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and others. After this, other men partook of the food in the big tent. The Nawwāb went to the dargāh at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, offered fātiḥa, paid five hundred rupees as nadhṛ and went back to his tent. He had his afternoon meal there and then returned to his palace.

Section 3.

Similarly Bahrām Jang Bahādur sent, on the 7th of Jumadiu'l-awwal, tents, all culinary articles, and other things necessary for the 'urs of Budū Shahīd šāhib (peace be on him) in the bāgh of Frangikonda. Next day he went there in person, arranged to pitch tents and decorate them and awaited the arrival of Nawwāb šāhib. On the 9th, the English guards in that place were appointed to guard the tents. Nawwāb šāhib arrived there in his chārat accompanied by the same men who were with him in his trip to the dargāh of Pīr Pahlawān šāhib. The party halted at the bāgh of the commander in that place.

As soon as Nawwāb šāhib entered the limits of Frangikonda, a salute of twenty-one guns was fired. Nawwāb šāhib met the commander and had tea with him. Then he reached his own tent and had breakfast. He sent away the children for a ramble round the hill of Frangikonda. He also went out, and in the course of the walk he gave presents to the pādri of the place. At about 12 o'clock, the commander paid a return visit to the Nawwāb. After he went away the Nawwāb sent to him at dinner time some trays containing fruits and various dishes of food. In the afternoon he went by suksāwan to the dargāh of Budū Shahīd with his beloved son and some officers, followed by armed jawāns, bāndārs and pipers. He offered fātiḥa, with five hundred rupees as nadhṛ and returned to his tent. He distributed bhatta to all children, the English guards, his own companions and men in different works according to rank. He had his dinner and returned home at the time of afternoon-prayer, when a salute of twenty-one guns was fired. The total amount of expenditure on these trips was about eight thousand rupees.

CH. I—NAWWĀB'S VISITS TO SHRINES

Section 4.

The Nawwāb used to send to Dādē Shāh ṣāhib every month a sum of one hundred and twenty-five rupees for the purpose of offering fātiḥa to Maḥbūb Ṣubḥānī with all formality on the 11th of each month. He granted to Dādē Shāh ṣāhib every year one-hundred and twenty-five hun to meet the expenses for the 'urs celebrated on the 11th of the month of Rabī'uth-thānī. In the course of his morning drive Nawwāb ṣāhib would attend the 'urs celebrating the anniversary of Ashraf Shāh ṣāhib whose respectable remains were interred in a tomb on the way to the spring in Mylapore, known as the Great Spring. He offered fātiḥa with one hundred and twenty-five rupees as nadhṛ and returned home. The Nawwāb had great faith in that saint. Likewise, the Nawwāb attended in the course of his morning drive, the 'urs celebrating the anniversary of Fattāḥ Shāh ṣāhib whose holy tomb was contiguous to the cathedral mosque in Muthialpet, and offered fātiḥa with one hundred and twenty-five rupees as nadhṛ.

Section 5.

Generally during summer Nawwāb ṣāhib fixed upon the house of his senior sister to enjoy the sight of the full moon, when he would gather his sisters and others. One day he said to his senior sister thus: "Tomorrow is the full-moon day. I wish to enjoy the sight for two or three days. It behoves on you to arrange to clean the ṣaḥn and dālān of your house, to furnish them with chāndnī-farsh of immaculate white colour, and to instruct singers and other guests to dress themselves in white robes for the occasion. You should send invitations to other sisters, and their children Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur and Naṣīru'l-Mulk Bahādur. They must also be dressed in white robes for the occasion. Maid servants also should be present, as usual. Trays full of flowers like mōgrā and shabbo must be got ready, and also bowls.

Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba got ready every thing as per instructions of the Nawwāb. Nawwāb ṣāḥib went to her house at about 8 o'clock in the night, and sat in the saḥn till 12 o'clock busying himself in playing various games with his brothers, sisters and nephews. Silver coins were scattered on all sides. One day he seated all his sisters and others present in a circle round the edge of the carpet with a little space between one other. He also sat with them. Then he sent for some pillows and said: "Pass these pillows quickly from one hand to another without allowing them to fall on the ground. Whoever fails to catch, will be loaded with all the pillows and punished. Now, I shall begin the game." This game lasted for about an hour.

Sometimes Sayfu'd-Dawla, Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān, Abdu'l-Ḥamīd Khān, Sarfarāz Khān, Shahsawār Jang, also took part in this game.

One day after the games the Nawwāb sent for a small box containing old silver coins, from Fataḥ-chawkī and told his brothers and sisters thus: "Each one should take out a handful of these coins and place them before me. I shall find out which hand brought out more coins." Each tried his hand at that. It was found when counted up that no hand took out more than forty rupees. Then the Nawwāb himself took a handful and counted up. There were fifty-one rupees. He smiled sweetly and said, "Praise be to Allāh: My palm is the palm that has the ability to rule, because it is the broadest, biggest and most extensive of all hands." He thanked Allāh for that. He increased the amount of coins taken out by his nephews, sisters and brothers in the ratio of one to two, one to three, and one to five respectively; for example, if ten rupees had been taken out by his nephew, he added twenty rupees and made it thirty; thirty rupees were added to the ten rupees taken out by his sister, to make forty; fifty rupees was added to the ten rupees taken out by his brother, to make sixty. He added ten rupees for every rupee taken out by him and distributed the whole amount among the guests, attendants and musicians.

Generally during the moon-light night, the Nawwāb, in compliance with the wishes of his sisters, took them in a royal chārat drawn by four horses, Tāju'l-Umarā, Ra'īsu'l-Umarā and others in one chārat, and his nieces and other relatives in another chārat. They started from the palace of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam at 9 o'clock in the night followed by two pahras. Some horses marched to the right, some to the left, and some in front as per regulations. In this manner they went sometimes to the tank in Sayyidābād, and at other times to the tank in Nungambakkam. He gave orders to the pahras that they should vacate the people in those areas; then he got down from the chārat with his sisters and went on foot enjoying the tamasha in the tanks. He spent about two hours in this manner. He started back at about 11 o'clock, came to the house of his senior sister, and bid them all farewell, while he rested for the night either at the house of his sister or at Fataḥ-chawki.

Sometimes he gave orders to pitch tents either on the side of the sea, or in other bāghs. He made arrangements for the seclusion of the area with qannāt and sarācha and then went there with his sisters. He also invited Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, the sons of his sisters and brothers, and fixed daily bhatta of one hūn for each of them. After dinner in the afternoon, he arranged to pitch tents on the broad portions of the ṣaḥn. He went out for a walk that side for a while, then sat on a chair and said: "I wish to have a test in running race: two of you must stand shoulder to shoulder and then run." In this race Sayfu'd-Dawla was matched with Majdu'd-Dawla, Itizādu'd-Dawla with Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla, Aẓīmu'd-Dawla with Ṣāhibu'd-Dawla, Ra'īsu'l-Umarā with Nāṣīru'd-Dawla, and Tāju'l-Umarā with Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān. Some of these were well matched, and some were not. When Nawwāb ṣāhib girded up his loins and contested with Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, the Nawwāb won the race. He asked his sisters also to race with some one. But they put forth lame excuses and did not compete. Then he called other ladies present and made them run in a pair. He told Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur thus: "I shall compete with the children in running. When we stand shoulder to shoulder, give the command to run, making a loud noise so that starting may be simultaneous with the command." Thus Nawwāb ṣāhib had race with children but none went ahead of the Nawwāb though some kept pace with him, while many lagged behind. After the game the Nawwāb distributed presents to every one according to rank through his senior sister.

Section 6.

Nawrōz was celebrated every year in the house of his senior sister, who, in obedience to the order of the Nawwāb, got ready all things necessary for making merry, namely, eggs worked with gold and silver and such other works in different colours. She got ready the royal repast in her own house. Nawwāb ṣāhib gathered all his sisters, brothers and their children at dinner time and dined with them all. Then he made them play with eggs. Sometimes he himself took part in the game. At other times he amused himself in panja-kashī with boys, and also wrestling with them in jest. The boys placed their hands underneath his and said: "Our strength is not equal to yours". The Nawwāb was very much pleased at this remark and gave them all presents.

Section 7.

Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, in compliance with the wishes of his sisters, made up his mind to go on an excursion to the Pulimādavaram tank. He sat on the green chair and wrote a ḥukm-nāma to Bahrām Jang Bahādur giving all details in regard to the arrangements for the journey. He summoned the Bahādur, gave him the ḥukm-nāma with the following instructions.

"Get a sum of five thousand rupees from the treasury with the help of Colonel Barrett Bahādur for expenses of the trip, and make very good arrangements for the journey in about five or six days. Take with you requisite things from farrāsh-khāna, bāwarchī-khāna, and tablūr-khāna, arrange to pitch tents in suitable places behind the bāgh of the Governor near the tank and furnish them with carpets and other things. Order Rīzāyār Khān, the bakhshī, to keep ready there five hundred armed jawāns, fifty troopers, besides risāladārs and commandants; direct Muḥammad Rīzā, the kotwāl of Tirmalkaṭī to send there about twenty shops including corn-chandlers who deal in different kinds of corn, and others who deal in other necessary things. I shall camp out there with ladies and others for about a week or ten days and none should have any difficulty for provisions. God willing, send information to me after making everything ready. Then I shall arrive there with the ladies. All the officers, ilāqadārs of the sarkār and servants of all grades must be enjoined strictly not to cause any kind of damage to the Governor's bāgh or the bāghs of other sardārs; severe punishment will be inflicted on those who disobey this order."

In obedience to the order, Bahrām Jang Bahādur conveyed all things necessary for arranging the camp. He also sent Riṣāyār Khān, the bakhshī, with an army, and the kotwāl with shops. Then he went to Pulimādavaram and carried out the instructions of the Nawwāb by erecting tents, and establishing shops in suitable places. He posted guards to ensure safety in every place. Then he sent information to the Nawwāb about the completion of all arrangements.

The Nawwāb sent another ḥukm-nāma in the name of Bahrām Jang Bahādur with the following contents:

"If the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur, the sons of Madāru'l-Mulk Amīru'l-Umarā Bahādur my brother, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur or any other relative reach that place before my arrival, you must receive them and provide accommodation thus: Iftikhāru'd-Dawla and Amīru'd-Dawla in one tent; the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur and the sons of Amīru'l-Umarā Bahādur in one tent. If some of my other relatives come, accommodate them in one tent. All these tents must be erected outside the boundary of the tents of the sarkār, near your tent. One big tent should be erected opposite to mine to serve as dining hall. Five or six tents and some bechōba must be got ready to the right of my tent for Tāju'l-Umarā, Rā'īsu'l-Umarā and other nephews and arrangements made to send iḍras of food twice to the ladies. You must keep ready on the day of my arrival fifty trays containing various dishes to be sent to the Governor at the time of mid-day meal."

Bahrām Jang Bahādur attended to every detail and sent information of it to the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb gave orders to Sālār Jang Bahādur thus: "God willing, I intend to go on an excursion to the Pulimādavaram tank with the ladies tomorrow at 6 o'clock. I shall camp there for about ten days. Please stay at Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ night and day, and get news of the welfare of the widows of Nawwāb Muḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur, family of my sisters and others, written in detail by the clerk of the dīwān-i-khāṣṣ, and send it on to me daily through the camel-messengers."

Riṣā Nawāz Khān was given the following instructions: "You must supervise the guards placed at the chawkī, the gates of Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ and palaces and be present near Colonel Barrett Bahādur. You should also enquire all news about kachahrī and other places, and get it written by Lachman Prasad, the munshī, with the knowledge of Colonel Barrett Bahādur. You must find out from him whether any letter or message has been received from the Governor of Madras and send it to me along with other news through Sālār Jang Bahādur."

Nāwwāb ṣāhib gave the following order also to Sālār Jang Bahādur: "The sons of Nawwāb Maḥammad Ālī Wālājāh Bahādur, the son of Madārūl-Mulk Bahādur, and some other children also have permission to go to Pulimādavaram. If they apply for carriages it is necessary that you give them each a suksāwan with a bhū'i and an armed jawān and send them off before I start."

After these instructions the Nawwāb went to the house of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam at dinner time and had his food. Then he spoke thus after dinner:

"Bahrām Jang Bahādur, in a short while, made everything ready for the trip to the tank. He has erected tents in different places for the use of zenana and mardāna. Tents for various works have also been erected. I have received an 'arṣī' from him on the subject. God willing, I propose to start with the ladies day after tomorrow morning before sunrise, and wish to camp there for about ten days. I had already sent to you two thousand rupees through Taqī Ālī Khān Bahādur. You must distribute the amount in the following manner: 600 rupees to two sisters, 150 rupees to the second sister, 150 rupees to your daughter, and 100 rupees to each of the daughters-in-law. They should be instructed to arrange for carriages for their use as well as for their guests, get provisions ready and reach your palace at the time of sun-set prayer tomorrow so that we might all start together the following morning. You need not provide for Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur and others. I have supplied them with necessities."

Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam distributed the sum as per directions of the Nawwāb. All the ladies assembled in her house at the appointed time. During the last part of the night of the 24th of Rabī'uth-thānī, 1215 A.H., Nawwāb ṣāḥib started with all of them to Pulimādavaram.

Bahrām Jang Bahādur who was in charge of the arrangements in the camp, sent tōrahs of food, got ready over night, to the ladies, sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur and the nobles who had arrived at Pulimādavaram earlier. He also gave instructions to the dāruḡha of the kitchen that he should send tōrahs of food to Nawwāb ṣāḥib and his companions after their arrival. Then at about 7 o'clock in the morning Bahrām Jang Bahādur rode his horse followed by troopers and armed jawāns and other julās, and went an hour's distance in advance to welcome the Nawwāb.

At about 9 o'clock the carriage of the Nawwāb, followed by a large retinue, came in view. Bahrām Jang Bahādur dismounted from horse-back and submitted eleven rupees as nadhṛ. He respectfully told him all the details: the arrival of the ladies, the arrangement for various works and the completion of every item of work entrusted to him. The Nawwāb was very much pleased with him. He applauded him, commended his merits and presented him with a green rumāl-shāl, and nīm-astīn from his own wardrobe. Bahrām Jang Bahādur submitted twenty-one rupees as nadhṛ for these honours and paid obeisance. Then he followed the Nawwāb's suksāwan walking a little distance representing important details for his consideration. Then the Nawwāb said, "I have an engagement with Lord Clive Bahādur;¹ I shall meet him and then come to the camp. You mount on horse and follow me."

CH. I—NAWWAB'S VISIT TO THE GOVERNORS' GARDEN

Nawwāb ṣāhib arrived at the garden of the Governor with his followers and had breakfast with him. He went round to see the garden at the request of the Governor. The garden was full of mango trees and grafted varieties of the best quality, and other kinds of fruit trees, sandal-trees, clovetree, nutmeg, and different kinds of flowers, English as well as Indian. The Nawwāb was delighted to see the garden and said to the Governor thus:—

"I have not seen such wonderful trees in my life. You have afforded me an opportunity to see this marvel."

The Governor ṣāhib said, "The cultivation of these trees in this country is an arduous task, because the soil and climate are not quite suitable. I got these trees after great endeavour and planted them. I supervised the work with great care and thus got ready this sayrgāh. The mango trees have begun to yield this year; they will attain their full growth in a short period.

"I hope for favours from your highness. The encampment of the sarkār is contiguous to the bāgh of this humble servant. Your officers may be enjoined strictly not to cause any kind of damage to the garden." Immediately Nawwāb ṣāhib gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur that he should attend to this matter. Then the Nawwāb got into a boat with the Governor and spent about an hour in boat excursion. When he alighted from the boat he gave a present of fifty rupees to the footmen

(1) Edward Clive, son of the first Lord Clive, was born in 1754. He succeeded to his father's Irish Barony in 1774, and sat in the House of Commons until he was, at the age of forty, created a peer of England as Baron Clive of Walcot. On Lord Hobarts' recall Clive was appointed Governor of Madras, and he reached the Presidency on the 31st August, 1798.

and others through Bahrām Jang Bahādur, bid farewell to the Governor and reached the encampment.

He inspected the tents erected in different places for men and women and was delighted with the arrangements. He went into the zenana, and spent about an hour in conversation with his sisters. Then he came out, enquired about the name of the occupant of each tent and went into his own tent. He called Bahrām Jang Bahādur and expressed delight in his knowledge of business and knack of doing things adroitly, applauded him and said: "You must be at this place as long as I camp here and attend to all the work. There is the tamlar treasury in my tent. Get the key from the guard through Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm and take out money for necessary expenses. Send 350 rupees everyday to my senior sister for the expenses of the ladies and keep the remaining amount for expenses of the kitchen, and payment of bhatta and gratuities to men as per my ḥukm-nāma. You must send everyday, morning and evening, at the appointed time tōrahs of food for the royal repast, and for the repast of the ladies, nobles and others according to rank. Other officers of the sarkār should be served food in the big tent in our presence. You must be attentive to other duties as well. If the tents are not adequate in number, write to Colonel Barrett Bahādur for more. I shall also send orders in regard to this."

Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm was ordered thus: "If Bahrām Jang Bahādur requires money for expenses of the sarkār and asks for the key of the tamlar treasury kept with us, you must get him the key from the guard and let him take from it the sum needed; the account must be entered in the daftar of Lala Lachman Prasad."

Meanwhile a suksāwān carrying the private money of the Nawwāb and a cart carrying the tamlar treasury reached the Nawwāb's tent from Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ with Muḥammad Ibrāhīm the risāladār, Shaykh Imām the jamaḍār and two armed guards acting as escorts. The Nawwāb gave orders to leave the suksāwan behind the masnad and near his own suksāwan, and the cart carrying the tamlar treasury in the ṣahn of the tent opposite to his own, and appointed a trooper to guard these.

Next morning he breakfasted with his sons at about 8 o'clock. Then he made arrangements for the pardah and went with the ladies to see the indigo factory and silk farm which were contiguous to his encampment. The silk worms were reared in rooms fitted with glass-cases and fed on mulberry leaves. He spent two or three hours in seeing the tamasha. He presented the workmen in these two places with one hundred rupees and returned with the ladies to the tents. He spent the whole day in shikār or other recreation.

At 10 o'clock in the night the Nawwāb invited to his tent Tāju'l-Umarā, Ra'īsu'l-Umarā, Majdu'd-Dawla, I'timādu'l-Mulk, Ḥusayn Nawāz Khān, Nāṣiru'd-Dawla and the writer of this chronicle, and asked them to sleep there. I'tizādu'd-Dawla did not come with this party because of his illness. Therefore the Nawwāb, before he started on this trip, drew his attention to the care of his health, and presented him with three hundred rupees and a gold garīyal. He also deputed a trooper to report to him about the condition of his health. The trooper inquired about the condition of the patient from Malikū'l-ḥukama Aḥmadullāh Khān, and reported the news to the Nawwāb at about 11 o'clock.

Every morning the Nawwāb went through the ablution and finished his usual religious duties by 7 A.M. Then he had breakfast in his tent with his son and busied himself in playing chess with Abū Ṭālib Khān and a Brahman Acharya. At about 10 o'clock he went to the tent of his sister and distributed presents in the zenana. Sometimes he listened there to the music of mīrāthiyān and other singers. He returned to his own tent at about 12 o'clock and smoked qalyān and found recreation in reading history and anthologies for about an hour. Then he took a nap. He woke up at about 2 o'clock, spoke in a humourous vein with his sons, and Amīnū'd-Dīn Khān and Dargāh Qulī Khān, and distributed fruits to ladies and others. He visited his sister's tent after 3 P.M. and had his dinner there. When he came out after dinner, he arranged sometimes for the tamasha of pahlawāns or he got into a suksāwan and went with his sons and companions to different gardens in that area. He spent thus an hour or two, purchasing fruits available in the gardens. He distributed half the quantity to all those present there and sent the other half to the ladies. He granted presents to gardeners and watchmen and returned to his own tent.

Sometimes Nawwāb shāhib got into his nālkī at the time of afternoon-prayer and made an excursion to the lake while his sons rode in suksāwans. One day during his trip to the lake, he went near the Governor's garden when he saw a gardener standing in the middle of the road. He held in his hands two very big unripe mangoes and was demanding justice saying thus: "Some one in the employ of the sarkār had plucked these two mangoes from the Governor's garden; when this slave attracted his attention, he threw away the mangoes and took to his heels. This slave pursued him demanding an explanation of this unjust act which was contrary to the orders of the Nawwāb. The offender talked abusively and ran away. Therefore this servant is on his way seeking the presence of your highness for redress. I hope that justice will be done. Your highness may be pleased to issue orders to hold an enquiry, catch the culprit and punish him severely." After listening to this well-founded complaint Nawwāb shāhib was very much roused. He left one of the jawāns who followed him with instructions to come with the gardener and present him at the camp.

The Nawwāb reached his encampment in the evening. He summoned Bahrām Jang Bahādur and spoke to him in great anger thus: "I had repeatedly told you at the request of the Governor that you should proclaim that none should cause any damage to or ravage the garden of the Governor or other sardārs. Who is this shameful man who plucked two big mangoes from the garden of the Governor, abused the gardener, and ran away, leaving him in the middle of the road to complain to me? What have I to say to the Governor?"

The Bahādur replied thus while his face had a shrunk look: "As soon as I received the orders I announced publicly that if any one behaved contrary to the orders of the Nawwāb he would be punished severely. Every one, from the young to the old, is aware of that order which was repeated frequently. Despite this, a shameless fellow had done this work which the Nawwāb had prohibited." In the course of this discussion the jawān arrived there with the gardener who brought the mangoes.

The Nawwāb directed Bahrām Jang Bahādur to inquire into this matter and report to him. The Bahādur called the gardener and enquired about the name and other particulars about the culprit. The gardener replied, "I do not know the name, but he may be described as a lean man wearing a jāma with a fine dastār." Bahrām Jang Bahādur narrated to the Nawwāb the particulars about the miscreant which he gathered from the gardener. The Nawwāb said: "When the gardener complained to me, the names of the son of Madāru'l-Mulk Bahādur and the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Āli Wālājāh Bahādur passed over my mind. Now it appears from the description of the gardener that it may not be the son of Madāru'l-Mulk Bahādur but it may be the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad Āli Wālājāh Bahādur." Then he summoned Azīm'u'd-Dawla Bahādur. He had already got information of the Nawwāb's wrath, and went before him in great dread. On his way he knocked against a tent-rope and fell down. As his great toe was injured, he had to limp and thus reached the presence of the Nawwāb. The Nawwāb said, "Perhaps you may know who went to the garden of the Governor and plucked the mangoes." He replied, "I am not aware of such an incident. If I had known it, I would have spoken the truth. This slave had never been that side. If it is proved by the gardener and the witnesses that I am the offender, then this slave deserves punishment." Nawwāb ṣāhib believed in his statement. He noticed that Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur was struck with extreme fear. Nawwāb ṣāhib called him by his side, embraced him and comforted him thus: "Be at ease! I heard that the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur frequently visited the gardens. The particulars supplied by the gardener indicate that it may be the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur." Then he directed Aẓīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur thus: "Go and fetch immediately the sons of Nawwāb Muḥammad 'Alī Wālājāh Bahādur. Take my carriage; jama'dār also will follow you." He came back with them in a short while. The Nawwāb told Qawī Jang Bahādur and Shēr Jang Bahādur thus: "The Governor's gardener suspects that you plucked the mangoes. If you did that, speak the truth." They were struck with awe and replied: "This crime was not committed by us. We never heard about that garden nor do we know where the Governor's garden is. If we are found guilty then we deserve censure and severe punishment." The Nawwāb replied, "By God! Immediately after I ascertain the truth, I shall imprison the offender and nothing shall stand in the way." He ordered thus: "Get the gardener, let him identify them." When the gardener came, Nawwāb ṣāhib told him thus: "You must not have regard for any one in this group. Whoever he may be, point him out without any anxiety." The gardener looked at them one by one and submitted: "This slave can easily discover the offender, for the face will point out the crime. But the offender is not in this group. It is certain that he will be found out with the help of your highness' favour." Then the Nawwāb gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur that he should appoint one commandant and four armed jawāns with instructions to go to every tent with the gardener and discover the offender. If the offender was pointed out by the gardener he was to be dragged to the Nawwāb's presence without any fear or anxiety.

Therefore the commandant, javāns and the gardener proceeded from tent to tent. The gardener was able to identify the offender. He was Ālī Mardān. This Ālī Mardān had the title Nuṣrat Ālī Khān. He was a person of rank, one of the old servants of the sarkār in the employ of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur. He was sitting in the tent of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur busy in a game of chess, while his master was in the zenana. As soon as the gardener pointed out Nuṣrat Ālī Khān, the javāns dragged him before the Nawwāb.

The Nawwāb was wild with excitement; he did not inquire about his case, but directed the orderlies thus: "Tie the hands of this disgraceful man together to his dastār, and beat him." In obedience to that order Nuṣrat Ālī Khān was severely beaten. The Nawwāb said, "O! Disgraceful man! Don't you know me? Didn't you understand my order? Didn't you dread to face my anger? Did you trifle with my command? As you sow, you will reap. If my beloved son or some one from among the nobles had committed this crime, I should have fettered him and whipped him." He gave the whip to Bahrām Jang Bahādur and said: "Ask this shameful wretch why he plucked the mangoes; if he speaks the truth, good; otherwise beat him till he confesses his guilt."

Nuṣrat Ālī Khān was fettered and imprisoned in the maykāṭ. The Nawwāb said to Bahrām Jang Bahādur "This is a disgraceful man, a despicable person. By God! I don't wish to show mercy to him. It is necessary that he should be kept in confinement the whole night and sent tomorrow morning to the jail in the bāgh. Let the risāladār be instructed to load him quickly with more heavy fetters and lead him captive to the fort of Chandragiri in the prison-van with two armed guards and one hawaldār; the gardener be presented with fifty rupees, and instructed not to inform the Governor of this incident." Bahrām Jang Bahādur gave the gardener money and advised him not to inform the Governor of the incident. Then Nawwāb šāhib expressed himself thus: "There is none to equal Tāju'l-Umarā and Ra'isu'l-Umarā in social rank and high station. Yet if this offence were committed by either of these I would have meted out the same punishment to him without any scruple. This bastard! What did he think of himself? Why did he act contrary to my command? He got the punishment for his offence."

Meanwhile Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur returned to his tent and learnt the details from his companions. He went before Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba weeping out, and related to her every detail about Nuṣrat Ālī Khān. About an hour later Nawwāb šāhib visited the tent of his elder sister and spoke furiously against Nuṣrat Ālī Khān. The sisters submitted, "Well, the unworthy person deserves more severe punishment. As your highness is merciful and generous, severer punishment is not inflicted upon him."

These remarks appeased the anger of Nawwāb šāhib to a great extent. The sisters got some women who were adepts in pleasantries and could talk wittily, and introduced them to the Nawwāb. These women engaged him in pleasant conversation exciting laughter and mirth and thus removed completely the rust of anger formed on the mind of the Nawwāb. He returned to his tent in about an hour, spoke as usual to Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān and Dargāh-Qulī Khān and then retired to rest.

Next day after breakfast Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur went before the Nawwāb weeping out as per instructions from his mother and aunt. He fell on the feet of the Nawwāb and succeeded in obtaining pardon for Nuṣrat Ālī Khān who was then released from imprisonment. The Khān, out of the consciousness of the sense of shame, left Madras in a short while for other cities.

The Nawwāb stayed in the camp till the 1st of Jumādi'l-awwal, 1215 A.H. He returned to town with the ladies on the 2nd of that month. Thousands of rupees were spent on this excursion.

Section 8.

Some days later, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr formed plans to give a feast to Nawwāb ṣāhib and ladies in Maḥbūb-bāgh.

This bāgh belonged to Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr and was situated on the way to Mylapore near the bāgh of Sir George Henry Kalam.¹ It was purchased by Sharafu'l-Umarā Anwāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr at a later time.

After the Nawwāb accepted the invitation, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr decorated the entire bāgh beautifully. He got tents from the sarkār and erected them in suitable places at the back of the garden. When he made everything ready, he screened the garden from the public view on the 9th of Shawwāl, 1215 A.H. He bought fruits from the bazaar, arranged half of them in trays, while he fastened the remaining fruits to the genus of trees to which they belonged in a manner not to appear unnatural but to give the semblance that they hung naturally from the branches. Then he requested the Nawwāb to shed lustre on his garden by his presence and look at the bāgh and the fruits on the trees. In response to the invitation Nawwāb ṣāhib shed light on the bāgh by his presence with his sisters and other dependents. He spent two days there enjoying the tamasha. Twice in a day thirty trays of food were sent for the royal repast at the appointed time. A large quantity of food was sent into the zenāna and the mardāna. Zunnārdār, bhūī, and others in the employ of the sarkār were given bhatta allowed for them by the sarkār. This trip lasted for two days. Nawwāb ṣāhib presented his sisters with two thousand rupees for expenses.

(1) This person has not so far been identified.

The Nawwāb, before leaving the garden on the 11th of Shawwāl, 1215 A.H., presented Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur with one thousand rupees and permitted him to play nawbat, to maintain, besides a guard in uniform, a trooper who would follow his sawārī in taluks, and to play tambūr at the time of taking leave of the Nawwāb as also on occasions of his return from the taluks. Then the Nawwāb returned to his palace with his sisters.

Section 9.

As Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba was suffering from palpitation of the heart, Nawwāb šāhib decided to go to Frangikonda and its hill, and stay there for five or six days. He gave orders to Bahrām Jang Bahādur thus: "Send some tents to Frangikonda and arrange to erect three or four tents in the garden of the sarkār and one big tent up the hill; request Colonel Barrett Bahādur to write a letter to the Colonel in charge at Frangikonda asking him to place guards around the tents for a period of one week, the period of my stay there; obtain from Colonel Barrett Bahādur six thousand rupees for immediate expenses pertaining to the kitchen and other works, and more money from Muḥammad Ma'sūm in case that six thousand rupees is not sufficient."

Bahrām Jang Bahādur made everything ready and communicated the news to the Nawwāb. Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba in accordance with the desire of the Nawwāb invited her sisters and other ladies. The Nawwāb started with the zenana and mardāna for the bāgh in Frangikonda on the morning of the 1st of Dhū'l-ḥajj, 1215 A.H. Each guest was assigned a tent. Tōrahs of food were sent both in the morning and evening at the appointed time. Daily bhatta ranging from one rupee to one hundred rupees was paid in the zenana through Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba and in the mardāna through Bahrām Jang Bahādur. Thus the total expenditure per day was nearly two thousand rupees. This continued for eight days. At 9 o'clock in the morning of the fifth day of the stay, the Nawwāb went up the hill of Frangikonda. He returned to his tent at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and had his meal as usual in the zenana.

Next day the Nawwāb started in a nālki after his dinner in the afternoon for the top of the hill at Frangikonda, while Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur, Husayn Nawāz Khān Bahādur, etc., Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and his (the Nawwāb's) nephews, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, and some other trustworthy officers accompanied him on foot. He reached the hill top and stayed there in the house of Johnson, the pādre, for about an hour and rested his companions. He presented the pādre with fifty hūn and the men in that place with thirty hūn. Then he left the place on foot. After walking a short distance he spoke to Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur thus: "Bābā Jān! You are very weak. Get into my nālki." Then he turned towards Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur and others and addressed them as follows: "Alī Husayn is not in a fit condition of his health. He was down with fever for a week during last month. He has not completely recovered from his illness. His face indicates that he is convalescent. If he walks at this stage his weakness will increase. Therefore I think it is expedient that he should get into the nālki, and you all excuse him for that."

Then the Nawwāb ordered for his nālki and helped his son to get into it. When the nālki descended the hill slowly step by step, the Nawwāb followed it placing his hands on it with a view to confer dignity upon his son. Nawwāb sāhib spoke to his companions in great joy as follows. "The Creator of the universe and the Cherisher, by the favours of the Prophet, has conferred this dignity upon my beloved son. I wish to conduct him in this manner as far as his tent. It behoves these persons not to mind their walking a little distance to reach the tents which are all very near."

Thus the Nawwāb followed the nālķī, while the nobles and other officers walked around him. When they reached the tent in this manner, Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur dismounted from the nālķī on the right side and kissed the feet of his father, submitting twelve ashrafī as nadhīr. Nawwāb šāhib accepted the nadhīr, clasped his son with great affection while tears fell down the cheeks, and said, "May Allāh, exalted be He, bless you and make you worthy of this manšab. May He preserve you from the evil eye of the envious. May He help you to attain your wish and make you prosperous and happy." Immediately all officers and nobles concluded that this was an indication of the right of succession to the throne. This incident became public and got to the ears of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam. It was also reported to her in detail by Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur in great secrecy. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam was perplexed and perturbed. She despaired of her brother's promise and assurance and was displeased with him. His other sisters also were filled with wonder at this incident. They were surprised at the unworthy act of their brother. They imagined that the Nawwāb, may God forbid, lost hope of the expectation of life. This suggestion gained strength in their minds and they also despaired of his life. They always occupied themselves with this thought.

At about 7 o'clock in the evening, Nawwāb šāhib was talking to his sisters in the zenana as usual. Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam was hinting at her displeasure right through. Nawwāb šāhib noticed her ironical expressions, which offended him, yet he was courteous outwardly. Next day Nawwāb Maliku'n-nisā Bēgam šāhiba and Nawwāb 'Umdatun-nisā Bēgam šāhiba inquired of the Nawwāb about the incident in secrecy. They remarked: "If you consider that your dear son should succeed to the throne after you, there is still a lot of time and there is no necessity to express it now. The eldest sister is much perturbed on this." The Nawwāb replied, "You have a wrong opinion. The fact is that Alī Husayn was ill for some days; he is still weak, not in a position to walk. It is for this reason I made him get into the nālki. The right of succeeding to the throne will devolve certainly upon my son in accordance with law. His sawāri by nālki yesterday had nothing to do with the idea you express now. Allāh, exalted be He, is Supreme and All-powerful. He will place whomsoever he chooses in high rank and power. The eldest sister is displeased with me without any reason."

The Nawwāb returned to his tent, had a mirthful and humorous conversation with Abū Ṭālib Khān, Amīnu'd-Dīn Khān and Dargāh Qulī Khān and then retired to rest for the night.

On the 7th morning Nawwāb ṣāhib had an attack of fever, and there appeared two or three boils, one below the neck and two on the right arm. He had a little breakfast without any inclination to eat. In the afternoon he went by sukṣāwan to the zenana. After dinner he returned to his tent and spent the night there. Next day all things were sent back. Some carriages of the ladies also left that day. The Nawwāb started with the ladies on the evening of the 9th at about sun-set and reached Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ at about 8 o'clock in the night and then went to the palace of his senior sister.

Section 10.

Next morning happened to be the ṭrafā day. The Nawwāb told Bahrām Jang Bahādur thus: "To-morrow is ʿidul-ṣ-ṣuhā. I do not think I shall be able to go to the mosque to-morrow. I have instructed Tājul-Umarā Bahādur to go there. You must keep ready as usual the retinue, etc., near the gate of Fataḥ-chawki."

All the nobles and members of the government came in their carriages, one after another according to rank, on the morning of the ʿid and stood at the gate of Fataḥ-chawki. The Nawwāb said to Ra'isul-Umarā Bahādur thus: "Go to Fataḥ-chawkī; sit in the mahādōl together with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur; seat Bahram Jang Bahadur opposite to yourself and proceed in that manner to the mosque." Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur sat together in the mahādōl, while Bahrām Jang Bahādur sat opposite to Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur. They went thus to the cathedral mosque followed by a large crowd. After the prayer they returned to Fataḥ-chawkī where qurbānī was offered. Then they went to the house of Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam with the same paraphernalia and presented nadhṛ to the Nawwāb and his sister. Some of the nobles sent their nadhṛ to the Nawwāb in the zenana. The Nawwāb authorised Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur to receive nadhṛ on his own behalf from some men, while mutaṣaddīs were asked to submit their nadhṛ to Ra'isu'l-Umarā Bahādur in the dīwān-khāna. They carried out the orders of the Nawwāb while a salute of guns was fired as usual. Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur, the two sisters, and their children went to the house of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and presented nadhṛ to the Nawwāb.

Nawwāb ṣāhib was restless because he had a sensation of pain and heat due to the boil and fever. Seeing the condition of her brother Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāhiba felt very uneasy. Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān, Malikul-ḥukamā Ḥakīm Aḥmad Khān, Ḥakīm Alī Naqī Khān and Ḥakīm Muḥammad Wāṣil, attended on the Nawwāb both in the morning and evening. Besides these, Ḥakīm Kamālud-Dīn Khān, Ḥakīm Āskarī Khān, Ḥakīm Abdul-Razzāq Khān, and such other yūdnānī and miṣrī ḥakīms were invited and the state of the Nawwāb's health was explained to them. Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān was diligent in his treatment for fever and boil. Another boil shot out on the back inflicting great pain. His sisters spent their nights in Fataḥ-chawkī. Colonel Barrett Bahādur presented himself during the hour appointed for men visiting the Nawwāb, inquired of him about his health and wrote to Dr. Fazāl about it inviting him to visit the patient. The doctor went at 11 o'clock and examined the Nawwāb. He also made inquiries about the treatment by the hakīms. He spoke to Colonel Barrett Bahādur thus: "Three or four boils have shot out in the region from the neck to the back, but the boil on the back may cause peril to his life. The sooner it is treated the better it will be. Else it will be fatal." Colonel Barrett Bahādur represented the opinion of the doctor to the Nawwāb.

Nawwāb šāhib said: "The doctor examined with care the boil on the back. Perhaps it is a cancer". Colonel Barrett Bahādur replied, "Though the boil is on the back, it is not at the particular spot associated with cancer. Your highness need not have any anxiety. The doctor is of opinion that your highness should stay in a house where there is free passage of air. He thinks that it would be agreeable to your health if you could take up your residence in the upper storey. It would be better and more beneficial if your highness could shift to Nuṣrat-maḥall." The Nawwāb said "My sisters do not wish to be separated from me even for a minute." Colonel Barrett Bahādur submitted: "There is no difficulty on that score. The zenana may be kept at the back of Nuṣrat-maḥall. They will be nearer to your highness."

The Nawwāb told his sisters thus during the hour assigned to women for visiting him. "The doctor is of opinion that I should not stay in this house. He thinks it would be better if I take up my residence in Nuṣrat-maḥall." Nawwāb Sulṭānū'n-nisā Bēgam and other sisters said: "Wheresoever you may desire to shift your lodging, we will be also present there. But we do not desire the doctor to treat you for the boil, because the doctor's method of treatment is very severe. We are very apprehensive of the result." Nawwāb šāhib said: "Doctors only can treat for such boils, for it is surgical work and doctors are experts in surgery which is not possible for yūdnī hakīms."

Nawwāb Sulṭānū'n-nisā Bēgam sent the following oral message in secrecy to the Malikū'l-ḥukamā through Majdu'd-

Dawla Bahādur regarding the Nawwāb's decision in favour of the treatment by doctors. "It is a great wonder why you are helpless despite your consummate skill in your profession to treat for a boil. You are abandoning him to doctors."

The Malikul-ḥukamā sent the following reply. "This boil is not fatal. This humble slave has treated for more serious boils. It is not expedient that Nawwāb ṣāhib should decide in favour of the treatment by doctors, despite the availability of devoted ḥakīms who are paid thousands of rupees. There is great risk in the treatment by doctors. Let this humble servant be given freedom to settle the course of treatment. God willing, by the beneficence of the most bountiful Lord, the supreme Ḥakīm, the absolute Healer, the Nawwāb will recover from his illness in a short while. May God forbid! In case this helpless slave fails, doctors may treat him. You can decide as you like."

Majdu'd-Dawla Bahādur conveyed the message of the Malikul-ḥukamā to Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgani. She and her two sisters wept out, prostrated before Nawwāb ṣāhib and said: "Your highness must approve of the choice of the Malikul-ḥukamā in the matter of the treatment for the boil. Allāh, the absolute Healer, will restore you to health."

The Nawwāb said, "God has decreed that a doctor should treat for this illness and not yūnānī ḥakīms. I have decided to go to Nuṣrat-maḥall to-morrow morning; then I shall appoint a doctor to treat me for the boil. I have fixed up a house at the back of Nuṣrat-maḥall for your residence."

Next day early in the morning, the Nawwāb went by a small nalkī to Nuṣrat-maḥall. Dr. Fazāl came at about 11 o'clock. Govind Rao was the apothecary and surgeon in the employ of the sarkār. The treatment for the illness was begun from that day. About eleven leeches were stuck on the sides of the boil.

Next day Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and her sisters shifted their lodgings to a room in Nuṣrat-maḥall, which was very close to the Nawwāb's room. Ḥakīm Aḥīnadullāh Khān and other hakims stayed always in Fataḥ-chawkī and went to Nuṣrat-maḥall in the morning and evening to inquire how the Nawwāb was progressing. The male relatives and officers went to Fataḥ-chawkī twice a day, to inquire about the health of the Nawwāb.

Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur, Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur and other nephews stayed in Fataḥ-chawkī from morning till midnight in obedience to the order of the Nawwāb spending their time in listening to story tellers who narrated stories or read for them Ḥamla-i-Ḥaydarī.¹ The story tellers were appointed by the Nawwāb in batches of two and every batch worked by turns for three hours. The Nawwāb assigned to each batch two hundred rupees which they got from Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm through the princes and utilised for necessary expenses.

Mawlānā Abdu'l-Ālī ṣāḥib paid a visit to the Nawwāb once in two days along with shaykhs and durūd-khwāns. They occupied themselves in reciting verses of the Qurān, and narrating traditions of the Prophet. They offered prayers and transmitted to him the efficacy of their prayer by the breath of their mouths. Then they returned in about an hour. During his illness Nawwāb ṣāḥib continued to observe the religious duties both in the morning and evening, and sent gifts and offerings to shaykhs and sayyids in the name of Allāh. Sheep, rams, cows, elephants and camels were given away as ṣadqa in accordance with the advice of astrologers.

One day Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam ṣāḥiba provided four of her own slave girls with beautiful clothes and jewels and gave them each fifty rupees. Then they were put in separate carriages and set at liberty on behalf of the Nawwāb, one at

(1) This was written by Muḥammad Rafī' Khān Bādhlī in the form of a poetical biography of the Prophet Muḥammad (peace be on him) and Ālī, the son-in-law of the Prophet and the fourth Caliph of Islam.

Patan (Georgetown), another at Tirmalkaṛī (Triplicane), the third at Mylapore and the fourth at Pulimādavaram. An alms-house was opened by the sisters and food was distributed twice a day to faqīrs. This practice was continued right through the period of the Nawwāb's illness which lasted for three months.

The doctor visited twice a day in the morning and evening and was very attentive to his duties. But there was no symptom of the boil being cured. Therefore the doctor suggested an operation. He comforted the Nawwāb in every possible way and performed the operation of the boil. During the operation the Nawwāb suffered severe pain; he wept out uttering "Allāh! the Bountiful! O! the Almighty, the pain enough! I have had enough! I don't possess greater power, strength, self-control and patience than this." After the operation was over, the doctor comforted and consoled Nawwāb sāhib and directed Govinda Rao to tie up the wound with bandages. Then he came out of the room, narrated the details to Colonel Barrett Bahādur and went away.

After the doctor left, the Nawwāb explained the condition to his sisters and had a little food in their presence. The sisters shed tears on seeing the condition of their brother. But Nawwāb sāhib said: "God is bountiful. He will show mercy to me." Notwithstanding his suffering from severe pain, the Nawwāb recited verses solitarily both in the morning and evening during the hour when it is supposed that prayers are granted by God. These verses, the Nawwāb's own composition, were expressive of supplication to the Almighty through the intercession of the Prophet (peace be on him). The Nawwāb recited these prayers with tears in his eyes. Then he would apply the tear-drops to the boil as a remedy, for he had faith in their efficacy.

The doctor did his utmost for ten or twelve days after the operation to heal the wound, but of no avail. He was very much perplexed. One day the doctor informed the Governor of the second operation that he was going to perform for the boil, and went to the Nawwāb's residence in the afternoon with two other doctors and opened out in three places. After the removal of the pus, the wounds were tied up with bandages. The Nawwāb suffered severe pain in the process of operation and cried out from the pain.

Colonel Barrett Bahadur was present every day at 5 o'clock in the evening, told the Nawwāb in English all about the affairs of the government and carried out the orders of the Nawwāb. Generally Nawwāb Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur paid a visit to the Nawwāb in the afternoon to inquire after him and stayed for about an hour. When Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the doctor entered the Nawwāb's room, Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur retired into the room of Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam from where he, in accordance with her instructions, listened with attention to the talk among Nawwāb šāhib, Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the doctor and informed the Bēgam šāhiba of it. When Nawwāb sāhib got information of it he was displeased a little and stopped his consultations with Colonel Barrett Bahādur.

When the doctor informed the Governor of the serious condition of the Nawwāb's health, the Governor directed the Town Major, that he should visit the palace twice a week, to inquire how the Nawwāb was progressing. The Town Major went to the kachahrī of Colonel Barrett Bahādur at 11 in the morning or sometimes at 5 in the evening. Colonel Barrett reported his arrival to the Nawwāb and then presented the Major, who made inquiries about the Nawwāb's health on behalf of the Governor and went away. Before receiving the Major, Nawwāb sāhib tied round his head a rāmāl shāl, wrapped himself up with a malmal chādar, sat up with great difficulty and spoke loudly and steadily with a view to hide from the Major the nature of his illness, weakness and feebleness, so that he might get a good impression of the state of his health. After the Major went away, the Nawwāb expressed the idea he had in his mind and spoke thus: "Although I considered that I should behave in the manner I did, yet it was of no avail. The Major would give a detailed report of my illness to the Governor. The supreme Ḥakīm, the absolute Healer, would recover me from this illness."

In brief, the sickness increased day by day. In due course the holy month of Muḥarram approached. The Nawwāb gave orders to Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur that they should erect as usual the standards of Ālī immediately after seeing the crescent moon. The Bahādurs made everything ready and hoisted the standards of Ālī on the night of the 1st of Muḥarram, 1216 A.H. The sisters kept company with the Nawwāb from morning till the time of after-noon-prayer and then went away to their houses to attend to the work in regard to their respective ūshūr-khāna.

Victuals for distribution among the faqirs in the name of Nawwāb ṣāḥib were got ready on the 6th of Muḥarram. These were carried before Nawwāb ṣāḥib in the afternoon, an earnest supplication was made to the Almighty for his recovery and then they were taken by Bahrām Jang Bahādur to the house where the standard of Ālī was hoisted. Ladies from the house of Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam also went there, said fātiḥa presenting nadhṛ and then returned. Tājū'l-Umarā Bahādur and Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur went there on the 10th night as directed by the Nawwāb, and appointed Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur to supervise the arrangements for lamps and other paraphernalia and remain there till the standard of Ālī was brought back after procession.

The anniversary of the Nawwāb's birthday was celebrated on the 26th of Muḥarram as described in the earlier pages. Nawwāb ṣāḥib was restless owing to his illness.

Section 11.

When Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur heard of the illness of the Nawwāb, he started from Trichinopoly with Muṭahhar Ālī Khān Bahādur, his beloved son, for Madras. Armed jawāns, troopers, and infantry numbering about two hundred men with two cannon followed Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur and his son on their journey for protection against waylayers, and pālayagārs who were highway men. A day before his arrival to Madras, Nawwāb ṣāhib had shifted his lodgings from Nuṣrat-maḥall to the house of his senior sister on account of the palpitation of his heart due to sickness. Next day Nawwāb Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur left the jawāns and others in Mubārak-bāgh and went with his son to see the Nawwāb and presented him with nadhṛ. Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur felt very happy to meet the Nawwāb, other brothers and sisters. He took up his residence in his own old bāgh as desired by the Nawwāb.

Colonel Barrett Bahādur got information about the armed jawāns who accompanied Husāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur and told the Nawwāb secretly thus: "Husāmu'l-Mulk has brought with him a large army and cannon on the pretext of protection against waylayers on his journey. But in reality Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam had directed him to do so, with ulterior plans which are useless and not workable. His army is now in Mubārak-bāgh."

Nawwāb ṣāhib was very much displeased with his sister. Next day he spoke to her thus: "I don't wish to change my residence from this place, for I feel much better after coming over here. But the doctor is of opinion that the air here is not suitable. He has informed Colonel Barrett Bahādur of this and suggested that the upper storey in Nuṣrat-maḥall would be better because the air is well suited for my health. Therefore, I wish to shift from here to Nuṣrat-maḥall to-morrow early in the morning. You must also move in there as usual."

Sultānū'n-nisā Bēgam replied, "Wheresoever you may go we will also come." The Nawwāb went from the palace of his senior sister to Nuṣrat-maḥall on the 14th of Ṣafar, 1216 A.H. The Nawwāb's sisters, ḥakīms and servants went there as usual. The treatment by doctors was continued. The Governor inquired frequently of the doctor about the condition of the Nawwāb's health.

SECOND CHAPTER.

*The serious illness of the Nawwāb; the treatment by the doctors; the scheme to write a waṣiyyat-nāma in the name of Tājūl-Umarā Bahādur; the displeasure between Sultānū'n-nisā Bēgam and Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur; the English army taking possession of Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ, and the demise of the Nawwāb.*¹

The illness of Nawwāb ṣāhib took a serious turn day by day. The doctors did their utmost by performing operations, and exerted their skill to heal the wound. Yet they could not bring him through. They dressed the wound twice a day. During the time of cleaning the wound and the removal of pus, the Nawwāb felt severe pain, and in that distressed condition he spoke imploringly to the doctor in English. Everyone present in his room was ill at ease like fish out of water, and melted into tears like candle. The doctor always spoke words consolatorily to him. One day, after the doctor had gone, the Nawwāb told his sisters that his life was despaired of. Seeing his weakness, the sisters wept tears bitter of remorse, although they outwardly comforted their brother thus: "The absolute

(1) According to the chronicler's scheme of chapters the following topics also occur in the second chapter: the correspondence between Tājūl-Umarā Bahādur and the Governor of Madras; the accession of Amīrūl-Hind Wālājāh Nawwāb 'Azīmūd-Dawla Bahādur to the throne, and the demise of Tājūl-Umarā Bahādur. As this volume of the translation is planned to stop with Nawwāb 'Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur, the other topics will follow in the Fourth Part of this series.

Ḥakīm will bring you through and restore you to health. He will grant you long life and happiness."

Section 1.

Next day Nawwāb ṣāḥib invited Colonel Barrett Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur and Bahrām Jang Bahādur to his room at about the time of after-noon prayer, and expressed to them the extremely dangerous condition of his own health. They suggested that a waṣiyyat-nāma should be written by the Nawwāb. Therefore Nawwāb ṣāḥib wrote with a strong mind the waṣiyyat-nāma in his own handwriting in the name of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, his son. Sālār Jang Bahādur and Taqī 'Alī Khān Bahādur were mentioned as witnesses. Then under some pretext he sent for the muhr-i-khāṣṣ which was with his senior sister, set his seal to the waṣiyyat-nāma and entrusted it to Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur in the presence of Colonel Barrett Bahādur and others and spoke thus to his son with a tear-stained face.

"O, my son, my darling, the Almighty, the eternal Lord, has, by means of His grace, conferred upon you this dignity and manṣab. It behoves on you to be watchful and cautious not to let the cord of wisdom slip from your hands. As you attend to every affair in the best manner possible, so must the bridle of government remain in your hands, for you have to face very sagacious and prudent men. You take counsel with friends like Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Colonel Barrett Bahādur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur. Other facts are given in detail in the waṣiyyat-nāma. You will understand them if you read it. Allah, exalted be He, has custody of my beloved son. He will protect him from the envious and keep him safe from harm."

He told Sālār Jang Bahādur, Taqī 'Alī Khān Bahādur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur thus:

"Take the waṣiyyat-nāma from Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, go over to his mother's house and communicate to her my message: 'The Lord of the universe has, by the intercession of the Prophet, the last of the messengers, conferred upon your son the dignity of headship over the kingdom of the Carnatic, and it shall bring happiness to you. It is necessary that you should take care of your son and it must bring happiness to you'."

He called Riṣā Nawāz Khān, the bakhshī, and said to him thus: "Allāh, exalted be He, has conferred dignity upon Ālī Ḥusayn by making him my successor. You should always remain in his presence night and day with some jawāns."

He told Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur thus: "From this day, you must be by my side at all times; come and go in the morning and evening to inquire after me." Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur acted up to the wishes of his father from that day.

Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Taqī Ālī Khān Bahādur, and Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur, remained in the presence of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur night and day in accordance with the command of the Nawwāb.

The news about the waṣiyyat-nāma was already well-known. When Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam heard it, she was very much depressed and enraged. She complained of her brother to Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur thus: "Nawwāb ṣāhib has neglected us. He has not kept his promises made to me. He will get retribution for his faithlessness from the absolute Qāzī." Sayfu'l-Mulk Bahādur replied, "My sister, these unworthy words do not become you. Do not reveal your feelings to others, for it is improper." Nawwāb Sultānu'n-nisā Bēgam was ill-disposed towards Nawwāb ṣāhib; her displeasure became manifest whenever she met the Nawwāb and had a talk with him. Nawwāb ṣāhib understood it, and wisely feigned ignorance of it. One day the Bēgam ṣāhiba expressed her feelings strongly thus: "If my brother harbours any doubt or suspicion against me, let the royal repast be got ready elsewhere." Nawwāb ṣāhib replied, "I am neither displeased with you, nor I have any doubt about you. You are entertaining such feelings in your mind."

The Nawwāb from that day made arrangements for his food with the mother of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur. Generally he had his dinner in the mardāna and occasionally in the zenana. The Nawwāb and his sister kept up friendly relations outwardly but there was displeasure in their hearts. When Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam made secret enquiries of hakīms about the health of the Nawwāb and learnt that his life was despaired of, she transported to her own house the things and boxes of the sarkār that were in her custody, while she, at every moment, expressed outwardly her deep grief for her brother.

The frangs designed from the earliest time to bring the kingdom of the Carnatic under their control, but it was not possible to do so. Now they found a favourable opportunity in the illness of the Nawwāb. They were keeping in touch with the doctors and ascertaining the condition of the Nawwāb's health. One day the Town Major came to Fataḥ-chawkī to inquire after the Nawwāb as usual. He was admitted into the Nawwāb's room along with Colonel Barrett Bahādur. Then the Major inquired secretly of the Colonel about certain things, told him also something and then went away. The same day Colonel Barrett Bahādur presented himself purposely before the Nawwāb at about the time of sun-set prayer and submitted in secrecy thus:

“Hearing that your highness' life is despaired of, Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, during the past two or three days when prayers were offered for the recovery of your highness, had collected one hundred armed men in the dīwān-khāna of Ra'īsu'l-Umarā Bahādur. As per the advice of Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam, Ḥusāmu'd-Dawla also had brought with him from Nattharnagar a large army, cannon and cannon ball, gunpowder, and other implements of war, and had left these in Mubārak-bāgh. In these circumstances, it is not known what kind of mischief will crop up. This slave had acquainted your highness with the facts."

The Nawwāb was very much disturbed at this painful news, and said, "My friend, what shall we do for this?" The Colonel replied, "It seems to me that a small army may be sought of the company, and they may be placed as guards in Fataḥ-chawķī and the bāgh wherever necessary till your highness recovers from illness. This is a prudent measure. The army may be sent back when your highness recovers your health."

After careful consideration Nawwāb ṣāhib replied: "I do not think it is advisable to do so. I do not want the English army in the bāgh." The Colonel submitted: "Your highness is not in peril of anything. This is a good and wise plan, and there is no impropriety about it. On the other hand, it is the proper way to deal with the seditious and rebellious people. It will guarantee security and tranquillity for your highness and the prosperous prince." The powerless Nawwāb said: "Choose the proper thing and do it in the proper way."

Next day, on the 16th of Ṣafar, 1216 A.H., Colonel Barrett Bahādur presented himself before the Nawwāb early in the morning, inquired how he was, got renewed the order to bring the English troops into the bāgh, went to the garden of the Governor, and requisitioned an army. Then he returned to Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ and enjoined on the guards at the gate to let the company's forces and their sardārs into the bāgh as they had the permission of the Nawwāb to enter.

The English army, which was already in readiness at the Governor's bāgh, marched at once under Colonel McLean and other sardārs with two elephant-loads of tents, cannon, cannon-ball, gun-powder, and other implements of war, besides manacles, and ten or fifteen miyāna. They entered Bāgh-i-khāṣṣ at about 10 o'clock, immediately after Colonel Barrett Bahādur reached Fataḥ-chawķī, and stationed themselves at its gates.

Nawwāb ṣāhib was very much perplexed after the arrival of the English troops. He conveyed his salām and the following message to Colonel McLean through Colonel Barrett Bahādur.

“Your pahra may be stationed along with the pahra of the sarkār in places assigned to them by Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Sayyid Riṣā Nawāz Khān, the bakhshī. Enjoin them not to quarrel or to create mischief. Whomsoever the pahra of the sarkār stops from entering the bāgh or permits to enter it, the English pahra also should follow them and act in the same manner. Whomsoever they attack, the English pahra also should do so.”

Bahrām Jang Bahādur and Sayyid Riṣā Nawāz Khān, the bakhshī, were told thus:

“The Governor ṣāhib, out of his kindness, has sent an army under Colonel McLean as a precaution to ward off certain evils. I have also given Colonel McLean a hint of some matters. You also meet him and form plans to pitch tents for the English army opposite to the ṣahn of the old building contiguous to the big gate of the bāgh. You must also take steps as early as possible to clean the old house and provide quarters for Colonel McLean. Let one English guard be posted at the big gate, two at the other gates of the bāgh, and four at the gate of Nuṣrat-maḥall, facing the house of the elder sister. One English guard and a pahra of the sarkār should be posted at Fataḥ-chawkī. Cannon and such other things must be kept in front of the army quarters.” The Nawwāb was busy giving these orders till the time of sunset prayer. He gave orders to Colonel Barrett Bahādur that he should arrange to send bhattā to Colonel McLean through Taqī Ālī Khān Bahādur in accordance with the regulations for the expenses of the Company's army, and that he must attend to all their needs.”

As soon as the news about the arrival of the army spread in the bāgh, everyone was thrown into a fright. The Nawwāb's sisters who got information about the arrival of the English army with implements of war, felt grief about it and spoke thus to the Nawwāb:

“May Allāh, exalted be He, keep you safe and sound in life for many years, and make you the medium for bringing about our happiness. It is not known why the English army has come into the bāgh?”

Nawwāb ṣāhib attempted to console them thus, while tears trickled down his cheeks: “Don't take the alarm. It is reported that pālayagārs and others in this country are disposed to rebel and defy lawful authority in different areas. So the Governor of Madras, out of kindness and good will, has sent an army of the Company for our protection. Do not be anxious and give way to any kind of fear.” The sisters expressed their deep sorrow for their brother, fell at his feet, supplicated to God for his health and took leave of him.

In brief, the illness developed day by day. The Nawwāb's strength and endurance decreased. However much the doctors endeavoured to treat him for the boils, it was of no avail. The Nawwāb was restless day and night on account of the bodily pain. One day he sent for Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and spoke to him some words mixed with good advice. He told him thus:

“ʿAzīmu'd-Dawla¹ is humble and meek. It is necessary that you stay always with him and inquire after him. Dine with him and do not leave him alone. Every work must be attended to with skill and intelligence. Everyone should be treated politely and in a friendly manner.”

Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur, in accordance with the advice of his father, kept company with ʿAzīmu'd-Dawla Bahādur and was very courteous to him. Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur went twice in a day to inquire after his father, followed by armed jawāns and chōbdārs. He remained in the presence of his father for about an hour and then returned. Sometimes Sayyid Riṣā Nawāz Khān the bakhshī, at other times Taqī 'Alī Khān Bahādur and Sālār Jang Bahādur also went with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur.

Section 3.

When the illness reached a stage in intensity, the strength and vitality of the Nawwāb declined. He was having a sensation of heat and pain due to the boils. During the morning hours he recited in solitude verses expressive of humble supplication to the supreme Healer and the true Ḥakīm for his recovery. He would recite one hundred verses and then say istighfār; then he would repeat the words tawba, and al-ḥfw, while tears trickled down his cheeks. His supplication and lamentation reached downstairs and those present there expressed their deep sorrow for the Nawwāb. Whenever Mawlānā 'Abdu'l-'Alī ṣāhib, Sayyid Shāh Karīmullāh ṣāhib, and Shāh Maḥmūd ṣāhib Sāwī, paid a visit to the Nawwāb, he entreated them to pray for his recovery and said: "I am in a precarious state of health and cannot be recovered to life." They comforted the Nawwāb thus: "Your highness need not be disturbed. Allāh, exalted be He, is the supreme Ḥakīm, and the true Healer. His institution for the care of the sick is endowed with ability to cure all. Allāh, glory be to Him, will keep your exalted highness safe and sound for many years. The present suffering will not last for more than two days, for says Allāh, 'Surely with difficulty is ease: With difficulty is surely ease!'" Then they recited some verses from the Qurān and transmitted to him the efficacy of their recitations by the breath of their mouths and then took leave of the Nawwāb. The exalted Nawwāb called back Mawlānā ṣāhib, seated him nearer to his pillows, took hold of the Mawlānā's hands, placed them on his own head and eyes and said:

"This old slave is named Ghulām Ḥusayn. This name was chosen for this decrepit man by his venerable mother who got the guidance in istikhāra. The exalted Nawwāb ṣāhib, my father, gave me the name Ghulām Walī. But men without understanding think that I do not conform to the faith of my ancestors because of my name Ghulām Husayn, and my raising the standard of 'Alī during the month of Muḥarram. But the truth of it is as follows: During the reign of my exalted father, my dear brother Naṣīru'l-Mulk Lālūmiyān, used to hoist the standards in the month of Muḥarram with my permission in our residence. I also gave my influential support to that. On the night of the 10th of Muḥarram, the standards were taken out in a procession on a howdah with lights and retinue. During my reign also, permission was given to hoist the standards in the old house, opposite to the gate of Bāgh-i-kalān, out of regard for the wishes of my senior sister. She used to go to the old house with langar-i-mannat of the ladies as well as of myself and hoist them. If 'ulamā saw in it reason to suspect the strength of my īmān, then Allāh knows what is what. I never deviated from the right course even for a minute. I make a confession of my faith to you. Allāh is my witness. I declare that I follow the religion of my father. I am certain that I shall not recover from this terrible illness, for it increases day by day; weakness has taken hold of me; I am sinking. God wills that it should be so. We have to submit to His will. I trust that your holiness will be by my side in my last moments, and teach me the names of Allāh, the Creator, and His prophet. You must also ask Shāh 'Alīmullāh ṣāhib to read the sūra-i-yāsīn. After the spirit takes flight, supply me with provisions for my journey to the next world in the same manner as was done for my forefathers, so that I might find my salvation."

Mawlānā ṣāhib came out with a tear-stained face, and recounted the talk he had with the Nawwāb to Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Sālār Jang Bahādur, Bah-rām Jang Bahādur, Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur and others.

CH. 2—THE NAWWAB'S LAST DAYS

Next day the doctor also lost hope of the Nawwāb's recovery. He told Colonel Barrett Bahādūr thus: "Today the condition of the patient seems to be that the boil cannot be healed, for the heart is infected with it. He will be alive for two or three days. It is a pity that all the treatment has been wasted. I had great hopes of his recovery."

After listening to the doctor, Colonel Barrett Bahādūr was very much disturbed. He went with Sālār Jang Bahādūr, and Taqī Ālī Khān Bahādūr to Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādūr in Fataḥ-chawki and communicated to him the opinion of the doctor. Then they consulted with one another and decided to arrange for certain things.

Two or three days passed in the same restless condition for the Nawwāb. On the 2nd of Rabī'u'l-awwal, 1216 A.H., Nawwāb ṣāhib felt great restlessness, and underwent pangs of death. Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān and some other ḥakīms, all officers and relatives remained there from sunset till next morning. The sisters were inquiring every minute after the condition of the pulse.

Section 4.

The world-illuminating sun appeared on the 3rd morning, but the veil of restlessness and sorrow was not lifted up and the hearts of the people were rent by pain. Sālār Jang Bahādūr, in accordance with the order of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādūr, invited Mawlānā ṣāhib, Shāh Ālimullāh ṣāhib, and other elders and gathered them together before Nawwāb ṣāhib to recite verses of the holy Qurān, and traditions of the Prophet, so that the Nawwāb might give ear to the sound, strengthen his īmān and find his salvation.

Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādūr who was affectionately devoted to the Nawwāb, recited the sūra-i-yāsīn. When the sisters heard the sound of the reading of the sūra-i-yāsīn, they wept out in the zenana. This depressed Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādūr. He went into the zenana and admonished his aunts thus: "You are close by the mardāna. The life of the Nawwāb is sinking. Weeping and wailing in this way are not proper, for the noise is heard outside. You may go to your houses." Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam and her sisters were displeased at this stern rebuke. They immediately got into their conveyances, and went to their houses, from where they were constantly inquiring about the health of their brother. Every minute Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān and other hakīms were feeling the pulse of the Nawwāb. They told Sālār Jang Bahādur and others as follows:—"It is a thousand pities that the state of the Nawwāb's health has come to such a pass. The doctor lost hope a week ago. If he had withdrawn his treatment a month earlier, we could have treated the Nawwāb. We have good wishes for the Nawwāb, but we did not have the good luck. Such an independent ruler as he is, has one foot in grave."

Nawwāb ṣāḥib suffered the pangs of death from early morning till about 8 A.M. Then just as the flame of a candle, that is about to die out, emits much light, the Nawwāb recovered from the agony of death and spoke in a loud voice thus :

"Why all this noise and confusion and such a large crowd around me? Get out!" Immediately all went out. About an hour later Muḥammad Ma'ṣūm and Muḥammad Rōshan, who were present near the Nawwāb, came out in great excitement and informed Mawlānā ṣāḥib and Sālār Jang Bahādur that Nawwāb ṣāḥib had reached his last moments. Immediately the Bahādur and Mawlānā ṣāḥib went near the Nawwāb with Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Khān. The hakīm felt the pulse, and permitted others to come near Nawwāb ṣāḥib's bed. Ālīmullāh Shāh ṣāḥib and others assembled there, and began to recite the verses of the holy Qurān. Amīrū'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhārū'd-Dawla Bahādur, and Bahrām Jang Bahādur did not come, for they were afraid of the Nawwāb's displeasure. In the meanwhile Colonel Barrett Bahādur came with the doctor and wanted to feel the pulse. Mawlānā ṣāḥib sent word through Sālār Jang

CH. 2—DEATH OF NAWWAB UMDATU'L-UMARĀ BAHĀDUR

Bahādur that it was not the proper time for the doctor to feel the pulse. Sālār Jang Bahādur approached Colonel Barrett Bahādur and the doctor, and explained to them in a way and managed to send them away from Nuṣrat-maḥall. When Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur entered the Nawwāb's room in Nuṣrat-maḥall with Amīru'd-Dawla Bahādur, Iftikhāru'd-Dawla Bahādur, and Bahrām Jang Bahādur, Ḥakīm Aḥmadullāh Kḥān who was feeling the pulse, turned about and said loudly with a sorrowful and inconsolable voice, 'Verily we are for Allāh and to Allāh we return.'¹ Then the hakīm rose from his seat.

Immediately after hearing this heart-rending news, the confusion caused by pain and sorrow reached the heavens. Great tumult, as on the judgment day, arose in all palaces, houses, lanes, bāzārs, and everywhere. Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, got by the side of the dead body with his nephews and gave passionate expression to his grief. In the meanwhile Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur went into the room and fell at the feet of Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur overcome by deep sorrow. The Nawwāb lifted him up, embraced him, consoled him and conducted him to Fataḥ-chawki, his residence, and took leave of him. Then Nawwāb Ḥusāmu'l-Mulk Bahādur, with a tear-stained face, accompanied the nephews to the house of the senior sister. He consoled all the sisters and their daughters, who lamented for the late Nawwāb and returned to his own residence. An hour or two later, Colonel McLean, the commander in the bāgh, in accordance with the orders of the Governor, posted armed jawāns at all gates of the palaces, and at the gate of the bāgh, in addition to the jawāns already posted in those places. After making all arrangements, Colonel McLean returned to his quarters.

Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur called Bahrām Jang Bahādur and gave orders that he should get quickly three thousand rupees from Colonel Barrett Bahādur, make ready everything for the funeral in consultation with Mawlānā Abdū'l-Ālī šāhib and send the coffin of Nawwāb šāhib in great splendour to Nattharnagar in the company of Ḥāfiẓ Aḥmad Khān. Bahrām Jang Bahādur received the amount from the Colonel, and busied himself in washing the dead body and shrouding it under the guidance of Mawlānā šāhib and other ūlims.

Nawwāb Sulṭānu'n-nisā Bēgam had a discussion with Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur through the mediation of Mīr Asadullāh Khān Bahādur in regard to the sending of the coffin by kamān-darwāsa of Nuṣrat-maḥall towards the palace of the Bēgam šāhiba. The washing of the dead body and other religious rites were gone through an hour before sunset. As the Bēgam šāhiba did not permit the coffin to be carried through the kamān-darwāsa, the coffin, adorned with ghilāf and shāmiyāna, was left the whole night with guards in the dālān of Nuṣrat-maḥall opposite to the kamān-darwāsa. Next day at about 7 o'clock in the morning, funeral service was held in the ṣaḥn of Nuṣrat-maḥall. Then the wall behind Nuṣrat-maḥall was demolished in accordance with the order of Tāju'l-Umarā Bahādur and the coffin was carried through that way in great splendour followed by a retinue and julūs and was dispatched to Nattharnagar in the company of Ḥāfiẓ Aḥmad Khān. A salute of fifty-six guns in proportion to the age of the Nawwāb was fired from the fort of Madras and the ships.

The Governor of Madras wrote to the commander in Nattharnagar thus: "The coffin of the exalted Nawwāb Umdatul-Umarā Bahādur Wālājāh II has been sent to Nattharnagar. The army must follow the coffin as far as the burial ground and a salute of guns should be fired from all forts in the kingdom as far as Nattharnagar."¹
